ESOA, with the support of the European Commission, has created a new online tool that will enable citizens to find a local distributor who can supply them with immediate internet connectivity no matter where they live, delivered through satellite technology.

On October 17th, the tool will be launched at the European Parliament by Neelie Kroes, Vice President and Commissioner for Digital Agenda, alongside a debate on the issue of Broadband for All between leading European policy-makers and industry representatives.

In addition to finding out more about the web tool and having the chance to try it out first hand, participants at the event will also have the opportunity to hear from top level speakers on the next steps as we move towards 100% coverage, and participate in an interactive debate.
