The European Commission works to overcome the barriers limiting the re-use of public sector information also through non-legislative measures.

In addition to EU legislation, the Commission also:

- engages with Member States experts in the Public Sector Information expert group (PSI Group) [1];
- funds an Open Data incubato [2]r assisting small and medium-sized entreprises in building sustainable business ideas on the basis of Open Data;
- funds the ePSIplatform [3], a comprehensive web platform with news on European PSI developments, good practices, examples of new products, services, and legal cases around PSI re-use;
- funded the Legal Aspects of Public Sector Information (LAPSI) [4] - thematic network of lawyers specialising on PSI re-use, including academics and practitioners; find the full collection of their deliverables on this page [5];
- commissioned studies on the following issues:
  - Presence of exclusive agreements [6] in member states;
  - Studies on the economic potential [7] of PSI re-use;
- developed an Open Data Portal [8]for its own documents and a pan-European digital service infrastructure aggregating content of existing open data portals inside the EU. Find more information [9];
- contributed to the G8 process on opening up government information, also for re-use, leading to the adoption of a G8 Open Data Charter [10]. Read [11] how the EU intends to implement the principles of the G8 Open Data Charter.
