Description: In the early middle ages an enormous mobility of people took place throughout Europe, ethnic groups were assimilated into native populations and new ethnic groups developed. This project aims to explore this period that was important in the formation of Europe, as we know it. Ten research institutes and museums from 10 European countries have joined forces for this project. The archaeological sources as well as the interpretation shall be registered in a database on the internet.

Objectives: To collect archaeological data from across Europe concerning this period of history and make it available to the public and researchers; to link the past with the present by showing how the past has formed the present, highlighting common cultural heritage and learning lessons.

Dates: 1/05/2002-30/04/2005

Community grant: 822.071,32€
