On 14 November 2012, Viviane Reding, Vice-President of the EC in charge of Justice, Fundamental Rights and Citizenship, announced the proposal of the EC to increase gender equality in top positions in Europe's biggest companies. The proposed Directive sets an objective of a 40% presence of women among non-executive directors of companies listed on stock exchanges.

After decades of empty promises and failed attempts at self-regulation, women only represent 14% of company board members, a shocking waste of talent when you think that 60% of university graduates are female. That is why today the Commission is presenting EU legislation to smash the glass ceiling that keeps women out of top jobs. By 2020, women will make up 40% of company boards.	00:00:52
