On 13 November 2013, the Members of the European Commission got together in Brussels for their weekly meeting. They adopted a number of documents to mark the start of the fourth European Semester for economic policy coordination in the EU: the Alert Mechanism Report will screen EU economies for potential macroeconomic imbalances, and indicate which economies require further analysis; the Single Market Integration Report will take stock of progress in the single market in sectors that are essential to promote future growth; the Annual Growth Survey will set out general economic priorities for Member States to follow when drawing up their budgets and reform plans over the next year; and the draft Joint Employment Report, which for the first time will include a scoreboard on employment and social policies, as well as a staff working document outlining how the country-specific recommendations have been implemented in the Member States.
