INTRODUCTION

This new wave of the Standard Eurobarometer was carried out between the 10th of October and the 5th of November 2005, in a difficult political context of the aftermath of the negative referenda on the European Constitution in France and in the Netherlands and difficult discussions on the budget of the European Union. Clearly, the events of the previous months have made their mark on public opinion, making the name of the survey all the more relevant: a barometer measures something at a specific point in time and that fluctuates as conditions change. This Standard Eurobarometer reflects the public opinion of European citizens at a time of reflection and debate.

This Standard Eurobarometer covers 30 countries or territories: the 25 Member States, the two accession countries (Bulgaria and Romania), the two candidate countries (Croatia and Turkey) and the Turkish Cypriot Community. It was commissioned by the Directorate General Communication of the European Commission and was carried out by TNS Opinion & Social, a consortium formed by TNS plc and EOS Gallup Europe. The methodology used is that of the Standard Eurobarometer surveys of the Directorate General Communication ("Public Opinion and Media Monitoring" Unit). A technical note concerning the interviews, carried out by the institutes of the TNS Opinion & Social network, is annexed to this report. This note specifies the interview method used, as well as the confidence intervals¹.

This report studies successively the major themes related to the European Union and its construction.

- ◆ First of all, we shall focus on the subject of life in the European Union, that is to say the general climate of opinion, the future expectations of citizens, the main concerns of European Union citizens at the current time, as well as the socio-political climate.
- ◆ In the second part of this report we focus on the relationship between the European Union and its citizens. We look at European democracy and identity, we present the core indicators of the Eurobarometer and we analyse how citizens think about the European institutions. This part also reports on the level of knowledge and information of citizens.
- ◆ The third part of this report deals more specifically with a number of current policy areas, namely the common foreign and security policy, the common foreign policy and the single currency. In this chapter we also report on how the public perceives the role of the European Union in terms of priorities, the level of decision-making and in particular in comparison to that of the United States.
- ◆ The fourth part of this report is devoted to the European Union's future, the speed of its construction, the future of the Constitution and further enlargement.
- ◆ Finally, we end this report by focussing on a European Union in a global perspective. We look at how life in the European Union compares to life in other world economies and we examine the opinions of European citizens concerning globalisation.

¹ The results tables are included in the annex. The totals indicated may show a one point difference with the sum of the individual units. It should also be noted that the total of the percentages in the tables of this report may exceed 100% when the respondent has the possibility to give several answers to the same question.

In this report, we analyse the results and their changes at the level of the average of the 25 European Union Member States and at a national level. The averages for previous years represent the results obtained for all the Member States of the European Union as it was composed at the time those surveys were conducted.

We shall also comment briefly on the way the replies vary according to certain socio-demographic characteristics of the respondents (gender, age, etc), as well as according to certain other indicators, such as their attitude to the European Union, whether they see themselves as leaders of opinion² and their political leanings³.

We wish to thank all the European Union citizens who have participated in the Eurobarometer survey over the years.
Without them, this report would not have been possible.

The Eurobarometer web site can be consulted at the following address:

² INDEX OPINION LEADERSHIP: 1. ++; 2. +; 3. -; 4. - -

QA1. When you get together with friends, would you say you discuss political matters frequently, occasionally, or never?

QA2. When you hold a strong opinion, do you ever find yourself persuading your friends, relatives or fellow workers to share your views? Does this happen...? Frequently - Occasionally - Never Thus, if a person interviewed tries often or from time to time to convince his or her interlocutor or discusses politics on a regular basis, he or she will be considered as a leader of opinion falling in category 1 (++) . On the other hand, if a respondent rarely or never tries to convince his or her interlocutor and never discusses politics, then he or she will be considered as being a leader of opinion falling in category 4 --.

* Cyprus as a whole is one of the 25 European Union Member States. However, the "acquis communautaire" is suspended in the part of the country that is not controlled by the government of the Republic of Cyprus. For practical reasons, only the interviews conducted in the part of the country controlled by the government of the Republic of Cyprus are recorded in the category "CY" and included in the EU25 average. The interviews conducted in the part of the country not controlled by the government of the Republic of Cyprus are recorded in the category "CY(tcc)" [tcc: Turkish Cypriot Community].

I. LIFE IN THE EUROPEAN UNION

We begin this report by setting the context in which public opinion towards the European Union, its policies and its institutions needs to be analysed. We look at two aspects, namely:

- ♦ The general climate of opinion: Life satisfaction, past and future expectations, people's main concerns and views on the economy;
- ♦ Political values: The incidence of postmaterialism, trust in institutions and national pride;

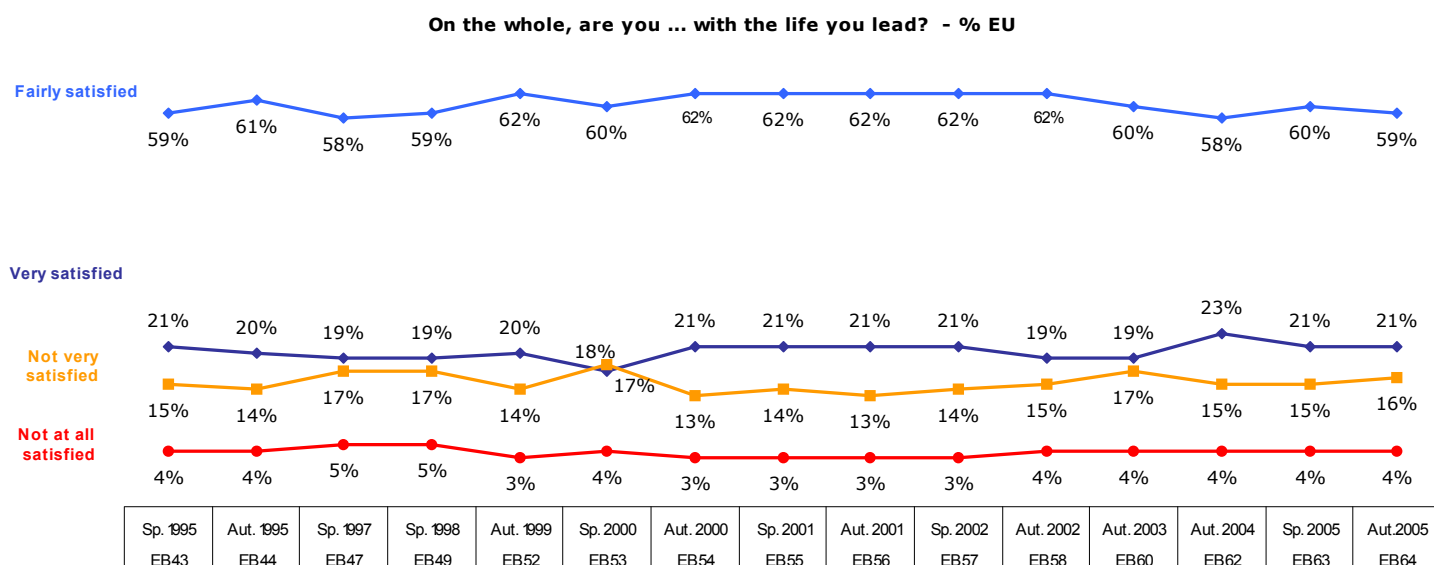

1. Climate of opinion

In this first chapter we present the climate of opinion in Europe as a backdrop to people's attitudes about the European Union, its policies and its institutions. What is the state of mind of European citizens at the end of 2005 and what are their expectations and main concerns for the coming year?

1.1. Life satisfaction

- Life satisfaction remains positive -

The level of satisfaction of European citizens with the life that they lead shows little change over time. Their state of mind is positive and the vast majority people in the European Union are on the whole satisfied with the life that they lead (80%)⁴.

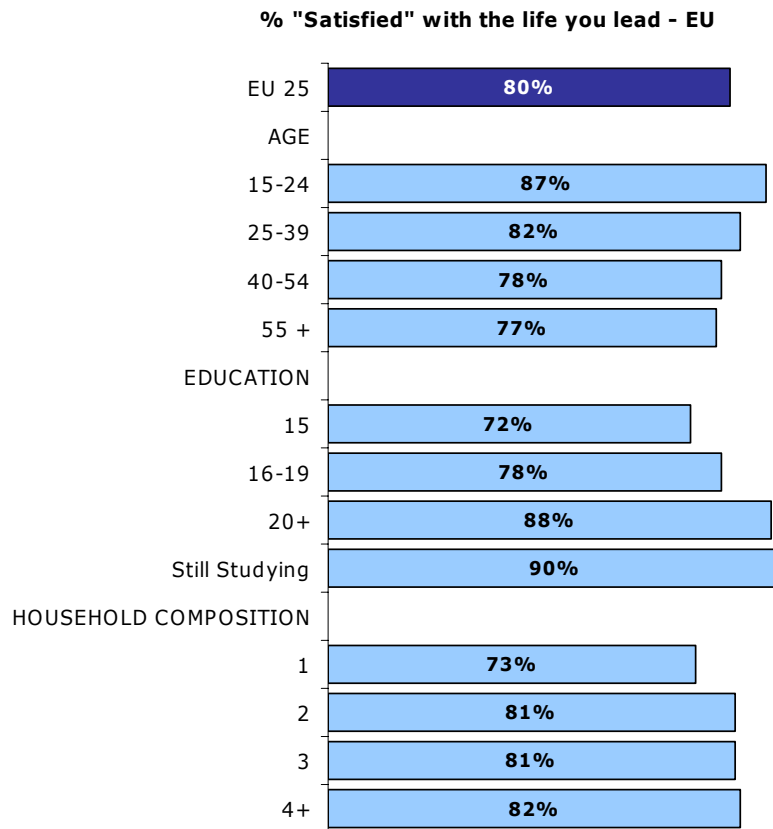

⁴ QA3. On the whole, are you very satisfied, fairly satisfied, not very satisfied or not at all satisfied with the life you lead?

As to be expected, life satisfaction varies according to people's socio-demographic characteristics.

The younger the European citizens, the more they tend to be satisfied with their current life; 87% of people aged between 15 and 24 are satisfied compared with 77% of the 55 and over age group.

Moreover, the level of satisfaction increases with the level of education. While 72% of respondents having studied up to the age of 15 are satisfied, the corresponding percentage among those who studied up to the age of 20 and over is 88%. It is even higher among students (90%).

Finally, persons interviewed who live alone tend to be less satisfied with their life in general than those living in a household composed of several persons.

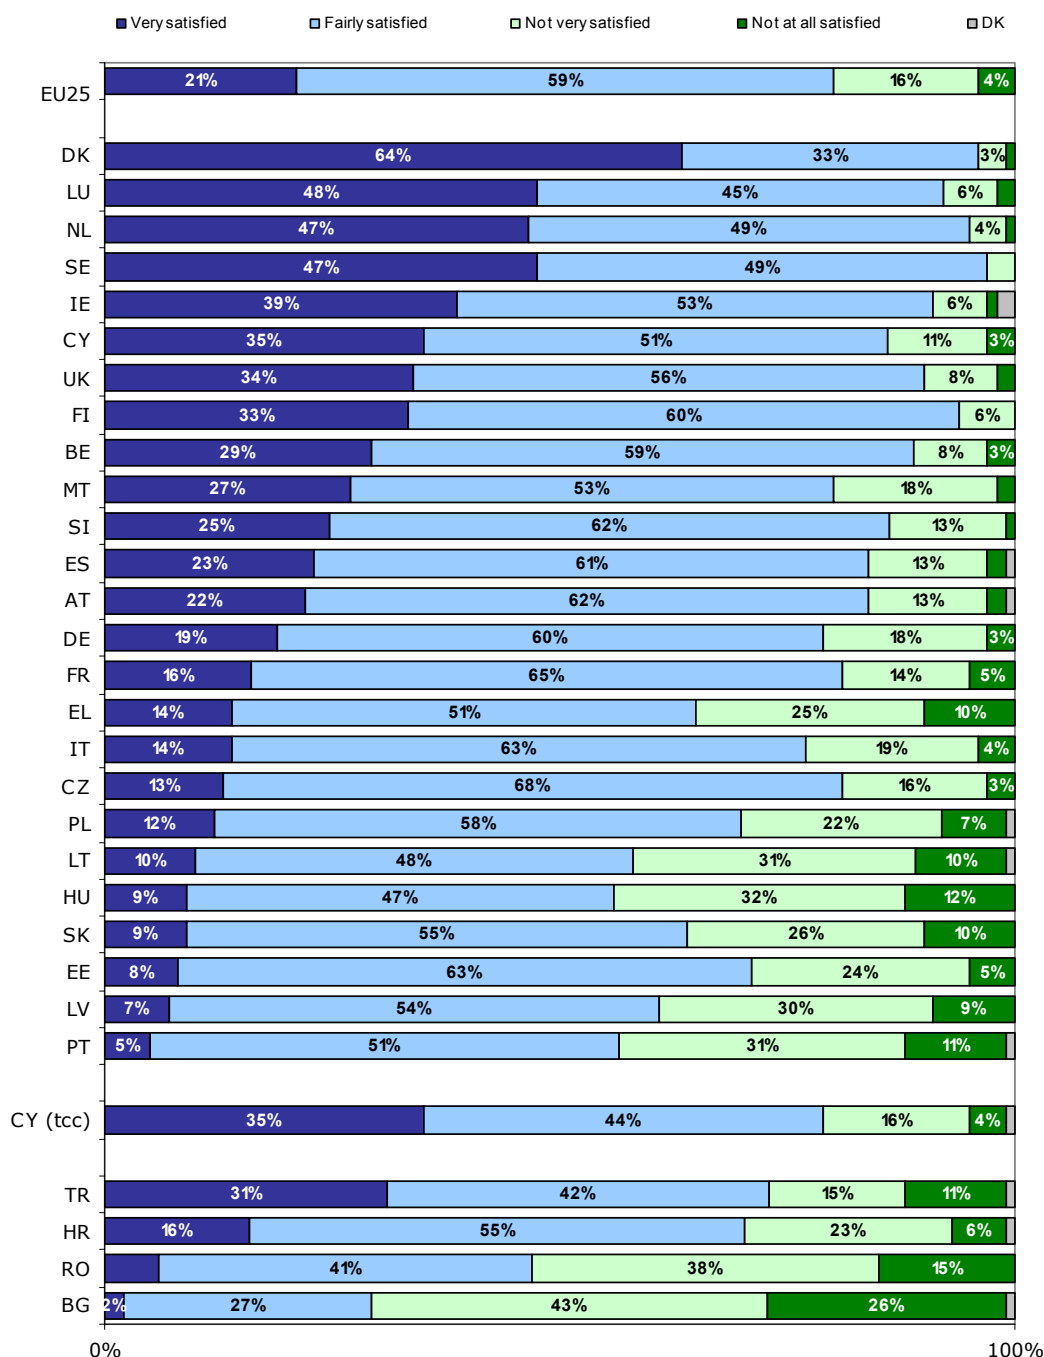

Although views in the European Union as a whole are positive, there are strong differences from one country to the other.

In Denmark, the Netherlands, Sweden, Luxembourg and Ireland more than 9 out of 10 people are satisfied with their life in general. Around two-thirds of Danes are "very satisfied" with their life (64%).

On the other hand, in Hungary, Lithuania, Portugal and Latvia around 4 out of 10 citizens are not satisfied with the life they lead.

Moreover, whilst almost three-quarters of the persons interviewed in Turkey are satisfied with their life (73%), a majority of the respondents in Romania (53%) and above all in Bulgaria (69%) are dissatisfied with their life at the current time.

On the whole, are you ... with the life you lead?

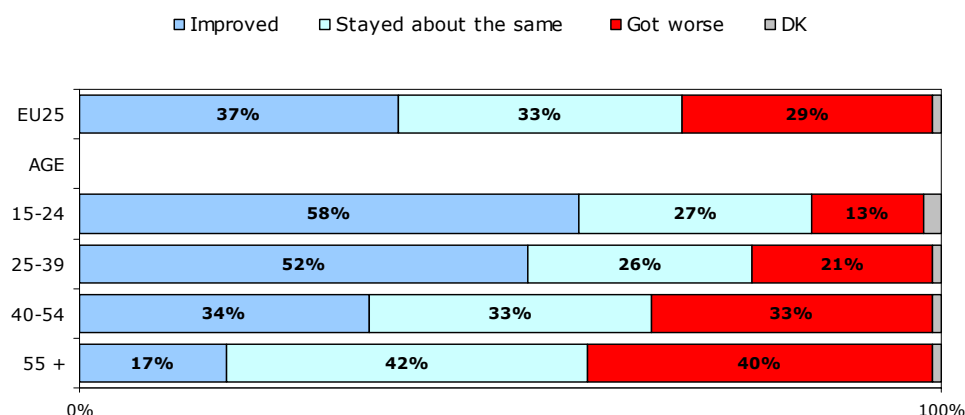

1.2. Changes in the personal situation

- European citizens have mixed views about the past five years but are optimistic about the future -

When they compare their personal situation today with that of five years ago, respondents are divided: 37% believe that it has improved, 33% that it has not changed and 29% that it has deteriorated⁵. There is a strong correlation between age and the way in which citizens perceive changes in their situation over the last five years: the younger they are, the more European citizens have a positive view of the way their life has changed. 58% of people aged 15 to 24 consider that their personal situation has improved, while only 17% of the 55 and over age group share that view. Among the oldest group of respondents, a relatively similar proportion (four out of ten people) considers that their situation is the same (42%) or has deteriorated (40%).

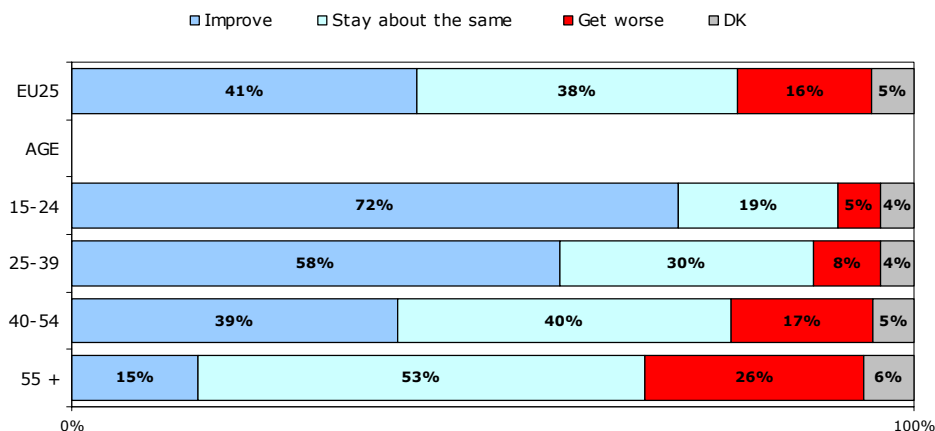

Comparison of the present personal situation with five years ago - %EU

In general, European citizens are relatively optimistic about the next five years⁶: 41% of the persons interviewed in autumn 2005 believe that their personal situation will improve and 38% feel that it will remain the same. Finally, 16% of European citizens fear that their personal situation will deteriorate over the next five years.

Once again, age is an important variable in determining the views of respondents. The younger the respondents, the more they tend to be optimistic: 72% of those aged 15 to 24 believe that their situation will improve, compared with 15% of the 55 and over age group.

Expectation of the person's situation in the course of the next five years - %EU

⁵ QA5. If you compare your present situation with five years ago, would you say it has improved, stayed about the same or got worse?

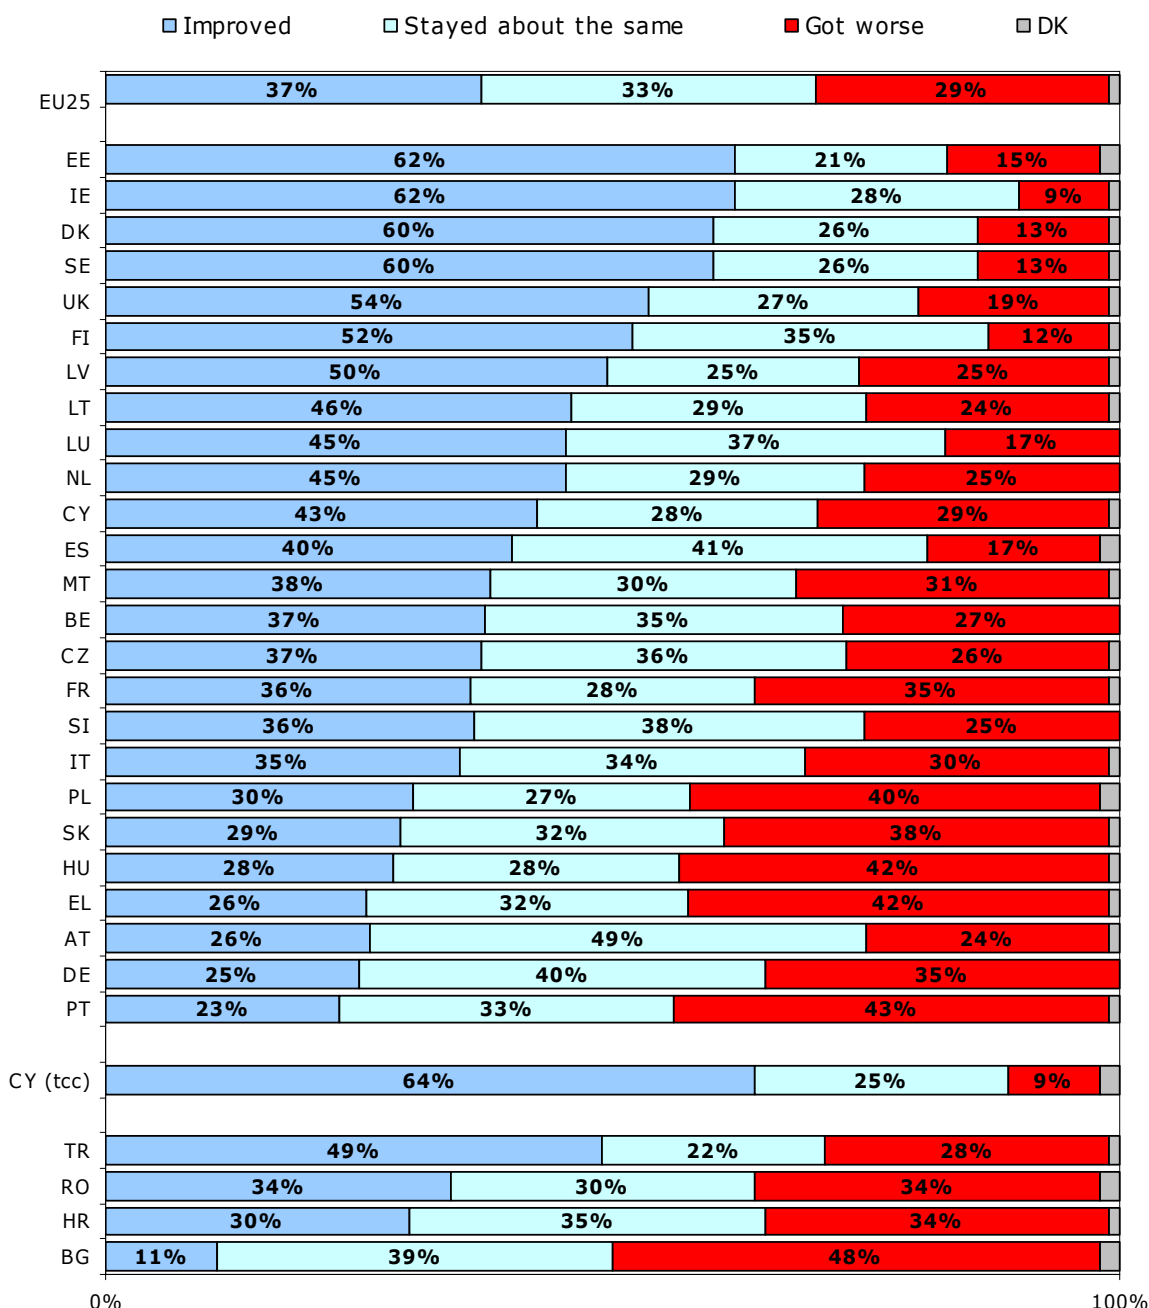

⁶ QA6. In the course of the next five years, do you expect your personal situation to improve, to stay about the same or to get worse?

At a national level, citizens in Estonia (62%), Ireland (62%), Denmark (60%) and Sweden (60%) are the most positive about changes in the personal situation over the last five years.

On the other hand, in Portugal (43%), Hungary (42%), Greece (42%) and Poland (40%) quite a significant proportion of citizens consider that their current situation is worse than five years ago.

As regards the accession and candidate countries, only 11% of the persons interviewed in Bulgaria consider that their situation has improved over the last five years, while 48% believe that it has deteriorated. In Turkey, on the other hand, nearly half of the people feel their situation has improved over the last five years (49%).

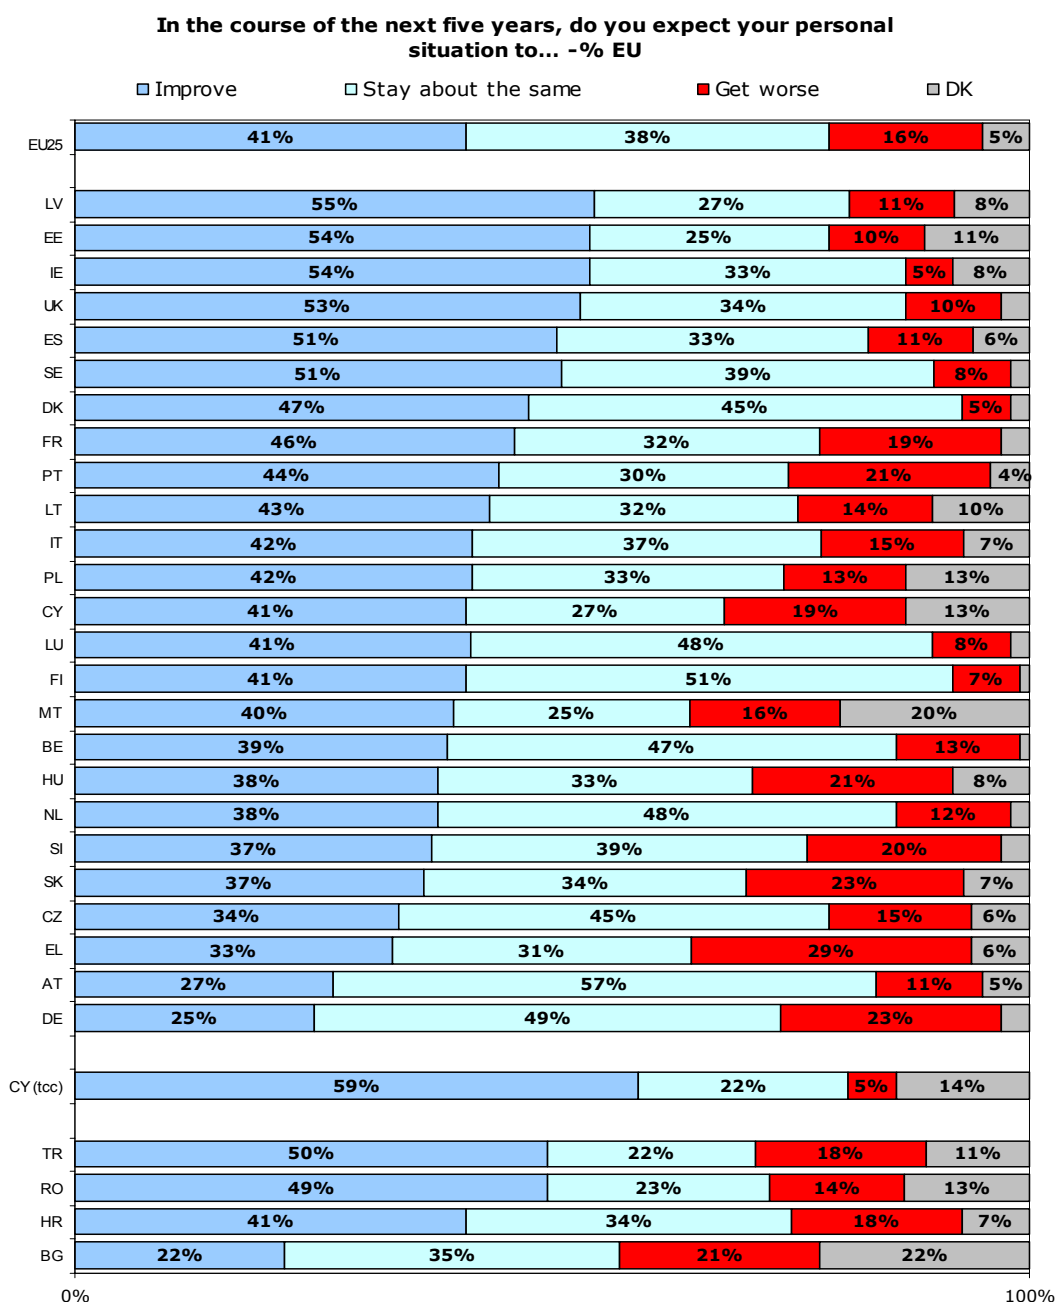

If you compare your present situation with five years ago, would you say it...? % EU

When it comes to the prospects for the next five years, more than half of the citizens in Latvia (55%), Estonia (54%), Ireland (54%), the United Kingdom (53%), Spain (51%) and Sweden (51%) are optimistic. In comparison to the spring 2005 results, the country that is now missing from this list is Malta, where a significant reduction in optimism has been recorded (40%, -11 points).

Moreover, around one respondent in two sees his/her situation as remaining the same in Austria (57%), Finland (51%), Germany (49%), Luxembourg (48%) and the Netherlands (48%). It is in Greece that there is the strongest support for the view that the personal situation will deteriorate over the next five years (29%, + 4 points).

Citizens in Romania and Turkey are optimistic: 49% and 50% respectively believe that their personal situation will improve over their next five years. Views are divided in Bulgaria with more or less equal proportions believing their situation will improve and get worse and around one third expecting their situation to remain the same (35%). It is to be noted that in Bulgaria, 22% of the persons interviewed felt unable to express an opinion, which further confirms the uncertainty with which they view their future.

1.3 Future expectations

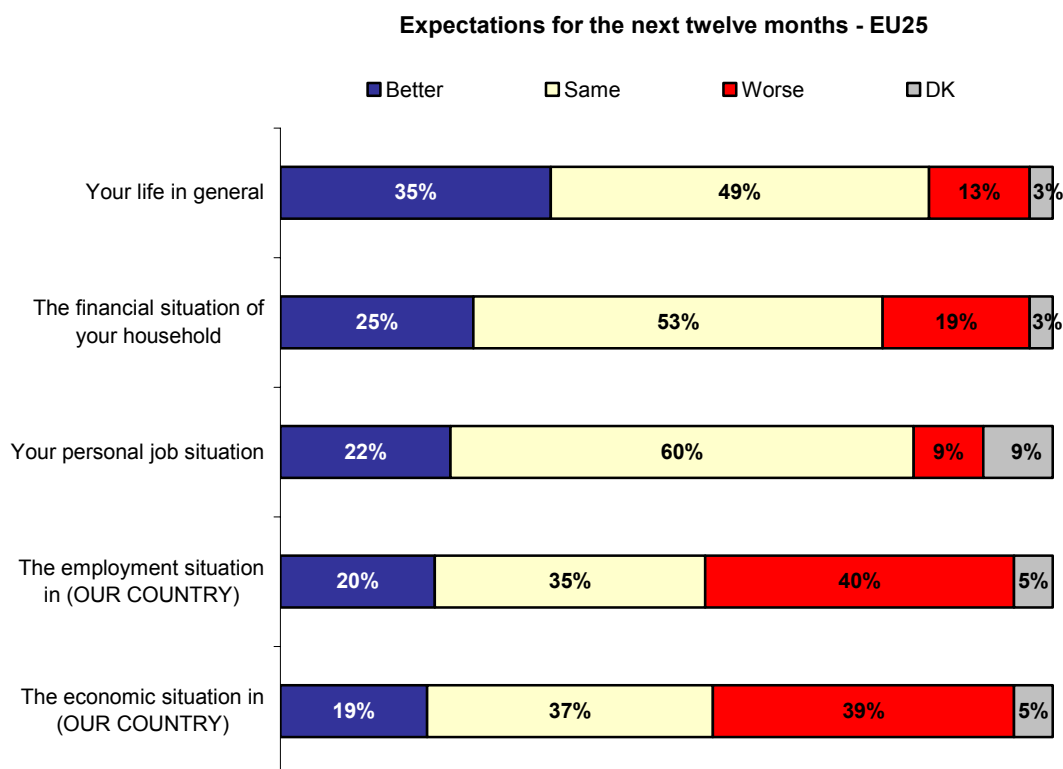

1.3.1 Expectations for several issues

European citizens hold positive expectations about their personal situation. They are less optimistic about the employment situation and the economic situation in their country. However, there are large variations between the Member States⁷.

- Sustained pessimism about the national economic and employment situation -

The most positive expectation concerns life in general: 35% of respondents believe that it will improve over the next twelve months, while 49% do not expect any changes and only 13% believe that it will be worse. These results are very similar to those obtained last spring.

European citizens are also relatively optimistic about the financial situation of their household and their personal job situation. Nonetheless, a substantial minority (19%) believes that the financial situation of their household will worsen over the next twelve months.

The confidence expressed by interviewees about their personal situation stands in sharp contrast to the way they feel about the employment and economic situation in their country. The most widespread expectation is that these two aspects will deteriorate over the next twelve months (40% and 39%, respectively).

⁷ QA4. What are your expectations for the next twelve months: will they be better, worse or the same, when it comes to...?

1° your life in general 2° the economic situation in (OUR COUNTRY) 3° the financial situation of your household 4° the employment situation in (OUR COUNTRY) 5° your personal job situation

However, in comparison to the previous Standard Eurobarometer survey, expectations about the employment situation reveal a slightly more upbeat state of mind. The proportion of positive responses has increased by two points whilst negative responses are now two points lower.

Furthermore, the pessimistic outlook in respect of these two national indicators certainly does not pertain to all Member States. In fact, in Estonia, Lithuania, Ireland and Denmark, citizens with optimistic expectations for the next twelve months outnumber those with pessimistic expectations. At the same time, in Portugal, Greece and Cyprus, more than six out of ten respondents believe that both the economic situation as well as the employment situation in their country will get worse in the next twelve months.

1.3.2. Focus on job security

Next, we briefly focus our attention on the results of a question that provides insight in the extent to which the European workforce feel their jobs are secure.

- Widespread confidence to keep one's job -

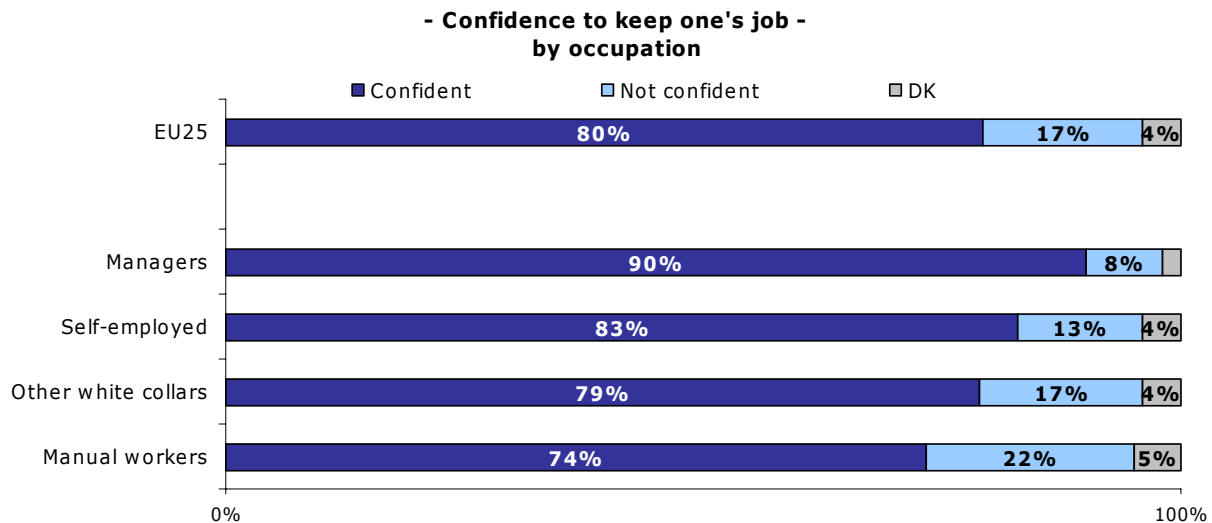

Just like in autumn 2004, eight out of ten European workers are confident that they will keep their job over the coming months⁸.

⁸ QA59. Would you say that you are very confident, fairly confident, fairly not confident or not at all confident in your ability to keep your job in the coming months? (Question asked to workers only)

As the graph above shows the level of confidence is not the same throughout the European Union and ranges from 45% in Slovakia to over 90% in Sweden (91%), Denmark (93%) and Luxembourg (94%). Generally speaking job confidence is higher in the 15 'old' Member States than it is in the 10 new Member States (82% and 69%, respectively).

Though differences exist between the different socio-demographic groups in the population, the influence of education and age is not as strong here as it is for some of the other issues discussed in the report.

1.4. The main concerns of European citizens

The pessimism expressed about the national economy and employment situation is also exemplified by the replies of respondents concerning the two most important problems confronting their country.

- Unemployment still the dominant concern though significantly less so than in spring 2005 -

Unemployment is the preponderant concern: advanced by 44% of respondents, it is still the main worry among citizens, though the extent to which EU citizens consider unemployment to be one of the most important problems confronting their country has gone down for the first time since 2003 (-6 points)⁹.

As in spring 2005, concerns about unemployment continue to affect a much broader spectrum of the population in the new Member States (57%) than is the case in the fifteen old Member States (42%). However, the positive development noted above applies to an equal degree to the new Member States and the old Member States.

The economic situation is the second most frequently mentioned concern. At 26%, this score has not changed significantly since the previous survey. In the fifteen old Member States, the extent to which this is a concern ranges from 4% in Ireland to 43% in Germany. In the new Member States, it is most widespread in Malta (44%) and least widespread in Estonia (16%).

For nearly one European citizen out of four, crime is one of the most important issues facing their country (24%). This issue comes in third place. Though at the level of the European Union as a whole this figure has remained stable over the past year, significant shifts have been recorded at the country level. The largest increase has occurred in the United Kingdom (41%, +10 points); the largest decrease has been recorded in Austria (14%, -10 points) and Hungary (19%, -10 points). Concern for this issue ranges from 10% in Malta to 46% in Lithuania.

Price increases, healthcare systems, immigration, terrorism and pensions form a second group of concerns with scores ranging between 17% and 10%. In comparison to spring 2005, more people now consider terrorism one of the two most important issues facing their country. However, this increase is limited to a few countries, and in particular those where terrorist attacks or threats took place. In the UK, a 20 points increase has been recorded (from 14% to 34%) and in the Netherlands an increase of 18 points has been recorded (from 22% to 40%). At 32%, concern for this issue has also increased significantly in Denmark, despite the absence of attacks (+20 points).

Following the March 2004 attacks in Spain, 31% of Spanish respondents are still concerned, though this has steadily declined from 59% in autumn 2004 and 46% in spring 2005.

⁹ QA30. What do you think are the two most important issues facing (OUR COUNTRY) at the moment?

1.5. Priorities to improve the European Union's economic performance

We end this chapter by analysing citizens' priorities as regards improving the performance of the European economy¹⁰.

- Still strong support for a knowledge-based economy -

Much media attention has recently focussed on future energy shortages, fuelled by the recent rise in oil prices. For European citizens, this translates in a more widespread desire to prioritise the more efficient use of energy as a means of improving the European economy (26%, +2 points). However, the improvement of education and vocational training (58%, -2 points) remains the top priority. For over two-fifth of European citizens investing in research and innovation (43%, -6 points) and facilitating the creation of companies (42%, -4 points) are priority actions to improve the performance of the European Union's economy.

European citizens are less likely to view investment in transport infrastructures (19%, -3 points) and increasing the legal number of working hours (11%, +1 point) as a priority.

A comparison between the old and the new Member States shows that, for citizens in the latter group, investing in transport infrastructure is more widely seen as a priority than is the case for citizens in the old Member States (28% and 17%, respectively), whereas the opposite applies as concerns other priorities. In the old Member States, 59% of the public views improving education and professional training as a priority, compared to 52% of the people in the new Member States. Equally, 45% of citizens living in the old Member States are of the view that investing in research and innovation should be a priority, compared to 34% of citizens from the new Member States.

¹⁰ QA63. Which of the following statements would you prioritise to improve the performance of the European economy? (Maximum 3 answers possible)

The following most relevant conclusions can be drawn from the analyses of the national results:

- ◆ In nearly all Member States, improving education and professional training is clearly the most popular action and is particularly so in Denmark (80%) and Cyprus (78%). In a few countries other actions are just as much of a priority. In Sweden, France and Poland, this is the case for facilitating the creation of companies and in Germany this applies to research and innovation.
- ◆ Cyprus is the only country where more than half of the citizens consider using energy more efficiently as a priority (51%). At 40%, Slovakia has the next highest proportion of citizens who hold this view.
- ◆ The view that investing in transport infrastructure should be a priority is most widespread in Slovakia (45%) and the Netherlands (42%).
- ◆ In Poland, Spain, Italy, Latvia and Lithuania, less than 20% of citizens attach priority to boosting the performance of the European economy through greater energy efficiency.
- ◆ As was also noted in previous report, people in France attach higher than average importance to the idea of improving the performance of the European economy by increasing the length of the working week. However, in autumn 2005, this view is now more widely held by people in Portugal than in France (22% and 20%, respectively).

2. Political values

In this chapter, we briefly examine three socio-political values that the Eurobarometer measures: postmaterialism, trust in institutions and national pride.

2.1. The incidence of postmaterialism

We begin this chapter by looking at the incidence of postmaterialism in the European Union. The thesis of postmaterialism, developed by the political scientist Ronald Inglehart, holds that the rise of affluence and the relative absence of war leads to a shift in people's attitudes, less focused on material welfare and more oriented to subjective individual well-being. This state of 'postmaterialism' is measured by asking the following question:

"There is a lot of talk these days about what (OUR COUNTRY)'s goals should be for the next ten or fifteen years. On this card are listed some of the goals that different people say should be given top priority. Would you please say which one of them you, yourself, consider to be most important in the long run? And what you be your second choice?"

*Maintaining order in the country
Giving people more say in important government decisions
Fighting rising prices
Protecting freedom of speech
Don't know"*

According to Inglehart's thesis, those who choose the second and fourth items are postmaterialists, while those who choose the first and third items are materialists. Those who opt for one of each type fall into a 'mixed' group.

Analysis of the results indicate that on average, 12% of European citizens are postmaterialists, 58% are mixed and 31% are materialists.

Incidence of postmaterialism	EU15	NMS	AC/CC	EU25
Materialist	29%	37%	41%	31%
Mixed	58%	56%	51%	58%
Post-materialist	13%	7%	8%	12%

In line with Inglehart's theory, the incidence of postmaterialism is highest in the 15 'old' Member States, whereas the proportion of materialists is highest in the accession and candidate countries. However, the largest proportion of the population in all four geo-political regions can be classified as mixed which means that the reality is more balanced.¹¹

¹¹ QA33ab. Respondents giving 'DK' replies were excluded from the analyses. In total this concerns 6% of respondents.

2.2. Trust in institutions and organisations

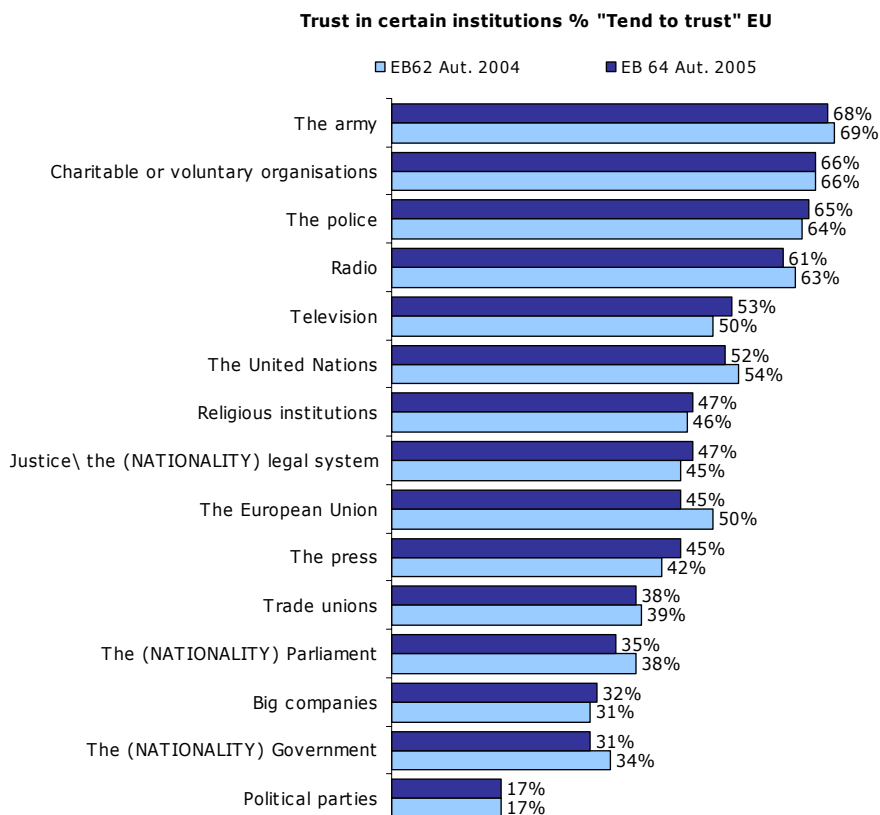

Trust in the media, political and social institutions and organisations¹² is the second indicator that we analyse to assess the socio-political climate in the European Union.

- Trust mainly in the organisations responsible for protecting populations -

Of the 15 institutions and organisations tested, the army is most widely trusted by European citizens (68%, -1 point compared to autumn 2004), followed by charitable or voluntary organisations (66%) and the police (65%, +1 point). The radio (61%, -2 points) is in fourth position and as such is the leading media in terms of trust.

Citizens have slightly more trust in the United Nations than in the European Union: 52% of respondents tend to trust the former compared with 45% for the latter. Moreover the level of trust in these two international organisations has gone down by 2 and 5 points respectively since the previous survey¹³.

At the same time, the public is more likely to trust the European Union than it is to trust the national political institutions. On average, only 35% of EU citizens trust their national parliaments and 31% trust their government. For both these national political institutions, the score obtained in autumn 2005 is 3 points lower than in autumn 2004. Political parties continue, on average, to obtain the trust of only 17% of European citizens.

¹² QA7. I would like to ask you a question about how much trust you have in certain institutions. For each of the following institutions, please tell me if you tend to trust it or tend not to trust it?

¹³ Trust in the European Union is analysed in depth in part II of this report.

A comparison between the results obtained in the ten new Member States and the fifteen old Member States, shows that on average trust levels tend to be higher in the old Member States, particularly with regards to the police and the legal system. This is just the opposite however, when it comes to the United Nations, television, religious institutions for which trust levels tend to be higher in the new Member States. This is particularly apparent in the case of the European Union.

2.3. National pride

Finally, we briefly examine the extent to which the respondents are proud to be a citizen of their country¹⁴.

- Strong national pride -

Analyses over time show that levels of national pride are broadening. Though the increases from one year to the next are small and not statistically significant, over the past five years a rise of 5 points has been recorded, with 87% of respondents now indicating that they are proud to be citizens of their country.

'Nationality' pride - EU25

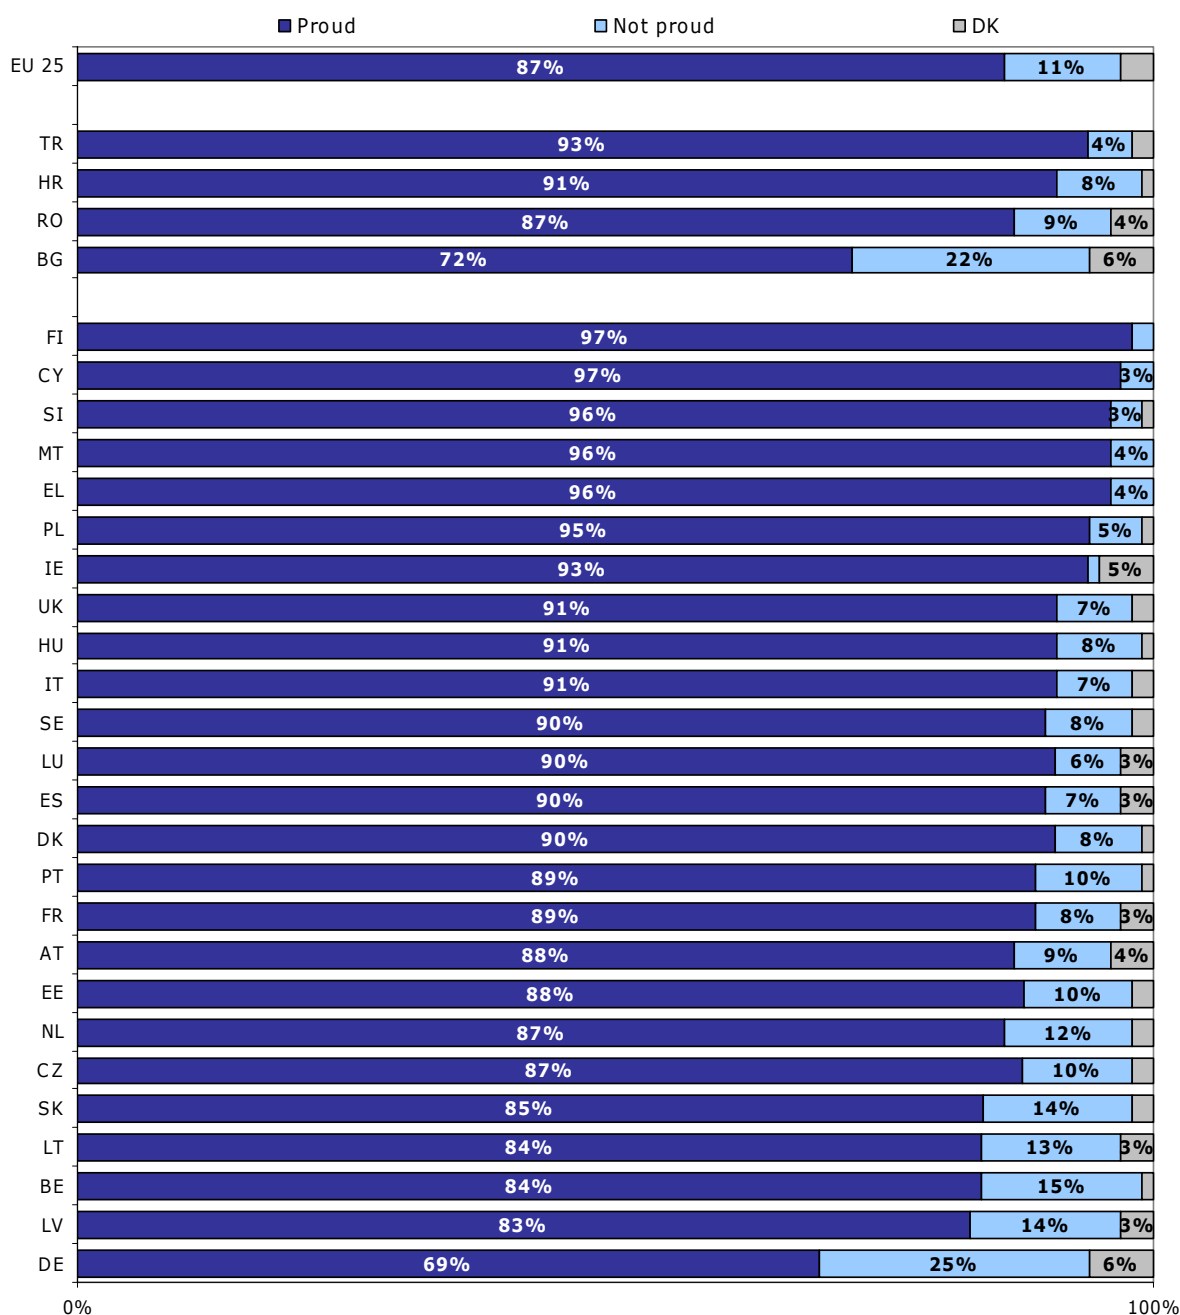

Furthermore, the country analysis shows that national pride is widespread throughout the Member States.

With the exception of Germany, where the notion of 'national pride' remains sensitive more than sixty years after the end of the Nazi Regime, more than 8 out of 10 respondents are proud to be citizens of their country.

In the accession and candidate countries, there is also a broad sense of national pride except for Bulgaria, where 22% of respondents indicate that they are not proud to be a citizen of their country.

¹⁴ QA41 And would you say you are very proud, fairly proud, not very proud, not at all proud to be (NATIONALITY)?

- Would you say you are ... to be (NATIONALITY)? -

In the context of European public opinion, the relevant question to research is to what extent national pride has an effect on how people think about the European Union. Though this requires more extensive analysis, a brief examination reveals that people who are proud of their country also tend to be proud of the European Union and vice-versa. However, because national pride is so widespread it is not a discriminating factor in explaining people's attitudes to the European Union in terms of support for membership, its image and trust.

II. THE EUROPEAN UNION AND ITS CITIZENS

We shall now examine the aspects linked to the relationship between the European Union and its citizens, namely:

- ♦ European democracy: trust in the European Union, the feeling that one's voice is heard, involvement of citizens in European affairs and efforts to involve them further.
- ♦ Citizenship and the meaning of the European Union: what does the European Union mean to citizens and what feelings does it inspire. Do they see themselves as European Union citizens and are they proud to be European?
- ♦ Membership of the European Union: support for membership of the European Union and its perceived advantages; the European Union's image.
- ♦ The European institutions: do citizens know the EU institutions and do they trust them?
- ♦ Informing European citizens: to what extent are citizens informed about European subjects? By what means or via what sources? How is European information presented at a national level?

1. European democracy

Following the 'no' vote on the European Constitution in France and the Netherlands, Heads of State and Government called for a period of reflection which will be used to enable a broad debate to take place in each Member State. Part of this process consists of a listening exercise so that the European Union can act on the concerns expressed by its citizens. This need for a better understanding of citizens' concerns and expectations is an essential element of the Commission's 'Plan D for Democracy, Dialogue and Debate'¹⁵. We shall address here four issues that highlight the public's state of mind with regards to this subject:

- ♦ Trust in the European Union;
- ♦ The feeling that the voice of each citizen counts in Europe;
- ♦ The perceived and desired involvement of citizens in European affairs;
- ♦ The role of the European Union, as well as that of national and local government, to further involve citizens in European affairs.

¹⁵ Plan D: COM (2005) 494 final, 13 October 2005

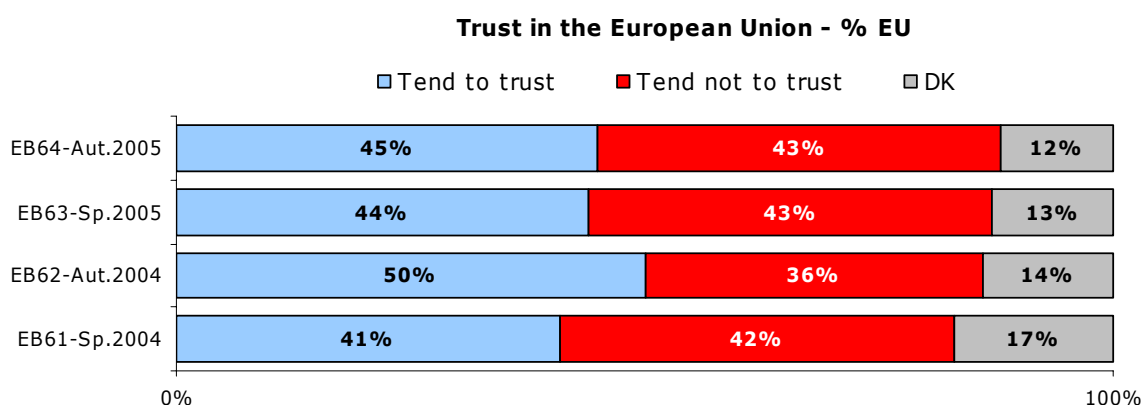

1.1. Trust in the European Union

- Trust in the European Union returns to pre-accession level-

In 2005, public confidence in the European Union has returned to the level attained prior to the accession of the ten new Member States in 2004.

In autumn 2005, 45% of respondents tended to trust the European Union while 43% tended not to trust it. This result is more or less identical to that recorded in spring 2005.

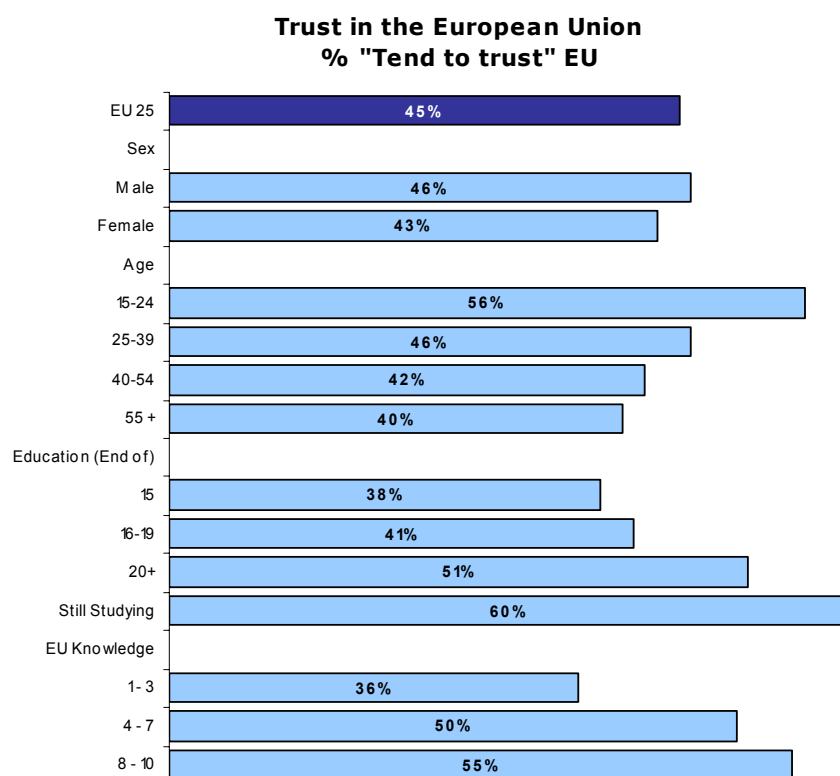

In 2004, confidence in the European Union had risen from 42% in the spring to 50% in the autumn¹⁶.

As is the case with most other attitudes towards the European Union, trust is strongly influenced by socio-demographic characteristics, with education being the most important predictor. Hence, trust levels vary from 38% among people who completed their full-time education prior to reaching the age 16, to 60% of people who are still studying. Respondents who feel that they have a (very) good knowledge of European affairs – which increases with education – are more likely to have confidence than are those who feel they know (very) little about the European Union (55% versus 36%).

Age is equally important: 56% of people aged 15 to 24 tend to trust the European Union, compared to 40% of people aged 55 and over.

¹⁶ QA7.13 I would like to ask you a question about how much trust you have in certain institutions. For each of the following institutions, please tell me if you tend to trust it or tend not to trust it? The European Union

Trust levels vary significantly from country to country. Confidence in the European Union is more widespread in the new Member States than it is in the old Member States (53% versus 43%). The extent of variation among the 10 new Member States is relatively small. With the exception of Latvia, where less than half of the citizens tend to trust the European Union, trust levels in these countries range from 50% in Estonia to 57% in Hungary. In Latvia, a negative development has been recorded since spring 2005 and public opinion is now strongly divided on this issue.

In the 15 'old' Member States, the divergence between the traditionally enthusiastic countries and the traditionally more sceptical countries persists, although less pronounced than it has been the case in the past. At 62%, trust in the European Union is most widespread in Portugal and Greece and in both countries a positive development has been noted since last spring. Trust levels also rose in Spain and Ireland. Public opinion is most negative in Sweden, with 61% of respondents saying they do not trust the European Union, followed by Finland (56%) and the United Kingdom (55%). In Sweden and Finland, a further slight decline in confidence levels has been recorded. It is interesting to note that the proportion of people who lack an opinion is highest in two of the 'old' Member States, namely Ireland (21% of DK responses) and the United Kingdom (20%).

Public opinion in the accession and candidate countries is positive in Romania (64%), Bulgaria (56%) and Turkey (50%). In the latter country, a significant increase in confidence levels has been recorded since the previous survey. A positive development has also been recorded in Croatia, though the majority of respondents in this country still tend not to trust the European Union (52%).

Trust in the European Union

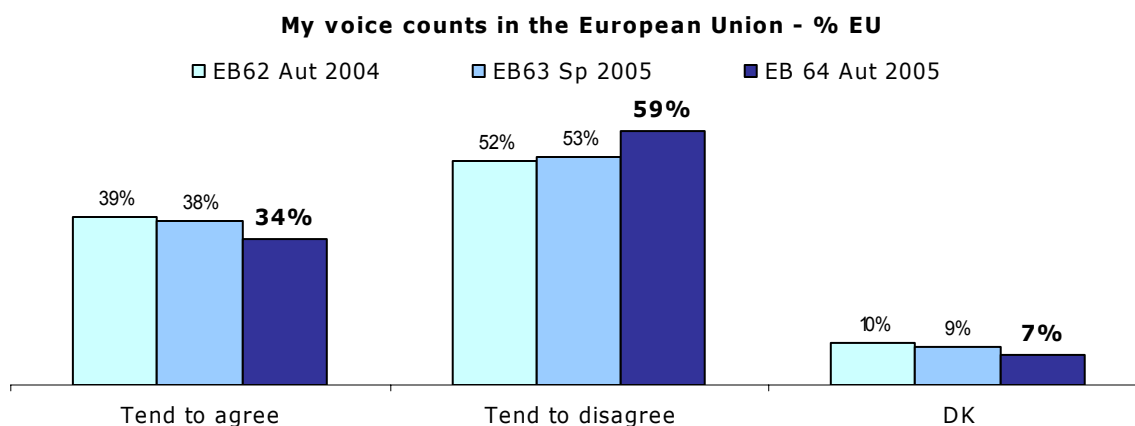

1.2. The feeling among citizens that their voice counts

One factor that influences people's trust in institutions is the belief that their voice counts. However, the relationship between these two factors is complex: citizens deal with many different public institutions, and dissatisfaction with one of these may influence their judgement of other institutions. This relationship is even more complex when many different countries are involved. After having looked at the extent to which the public tends to trust the European Union, it is interesting to analyse the extent to which they feel their voice counts in the EU.

- Feeling that one's voice does not count in the European Union intensifies -

Close to six out of ten European citizens have the feeling that their voice does not count in the European Union (59%). This sentiment has further increased since spring 2005 (+6 points). 34% take the opposite view, down from 38% last spring¹⁷.

As it was the case in spring 2005, there is no real divergence on this point between the old and new Member States, even if slightly fewer citizens of the latter consider that their voice counts in the European Union (EU15: 34% and NMS10: 31%).

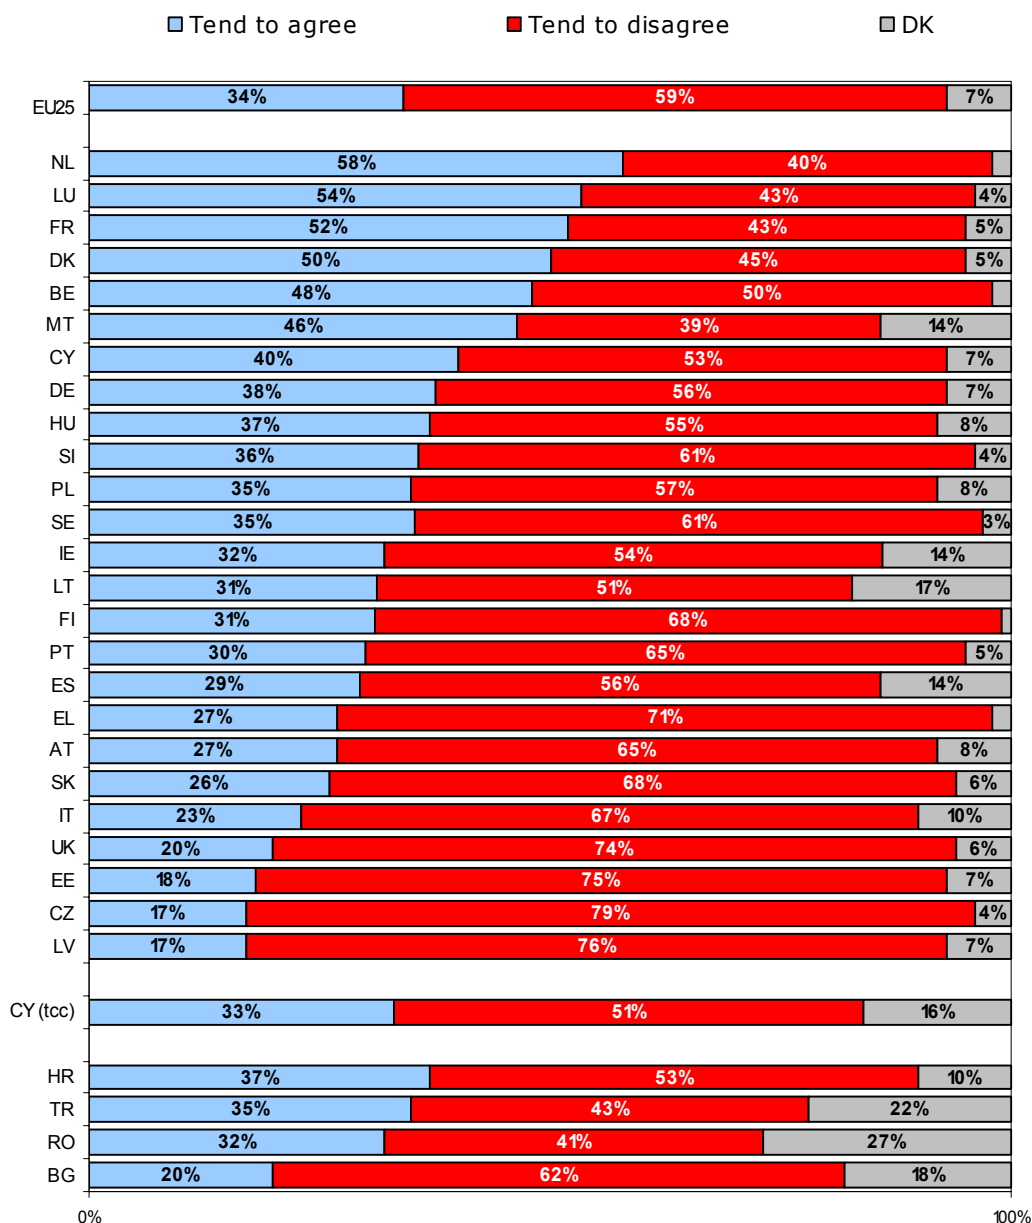

Analysis of the country results shows significant shifts in a number of countries, changing the distribution of public opinion on this issue in Europe. 58%, of people in the Netherlands now tend to feel that their voice counts in the European Union, up from 54% in spring 2005. An increased sense among the public that their voice counts could be seen as a consequence of being consulted for the first time via referendum on a European issue. Referenda are more common in France and here we note that the feeling that one's voice counts has gone down significantly in the period following the referendum on the European Constitution, from 58% to 52%.

¹⁷ QA15.1. Please tell me for each statement, whether you tend to agree or tend to disagree?
My voice counts in the European Union

Despite the recorded drop, France, together with the Netherlands, remains one of the few countries where at least half of the public feels that their voice counts. The other two countries are Luxembourg (54%) and Denmark (50%). In spring 2005, the majority of the public in Cyprus and Malta shared this view. Now this has fallen to 46% in Malta (-10 points) and to 40% in Cyprus (-18 points). In many other Member States, public opinion is now significantly more sceptical in this regard, most notably so in Greece, Italy, Slovenia, Spain and the United Kingdom. Apart from the Netherlands, Slovakia is the only country where significant positive development has been recorded since spring 2005 (26%, +4 points). Public opinion remains most critical in the Czech Republic, Latvia, Estonia and the United Kingdom.

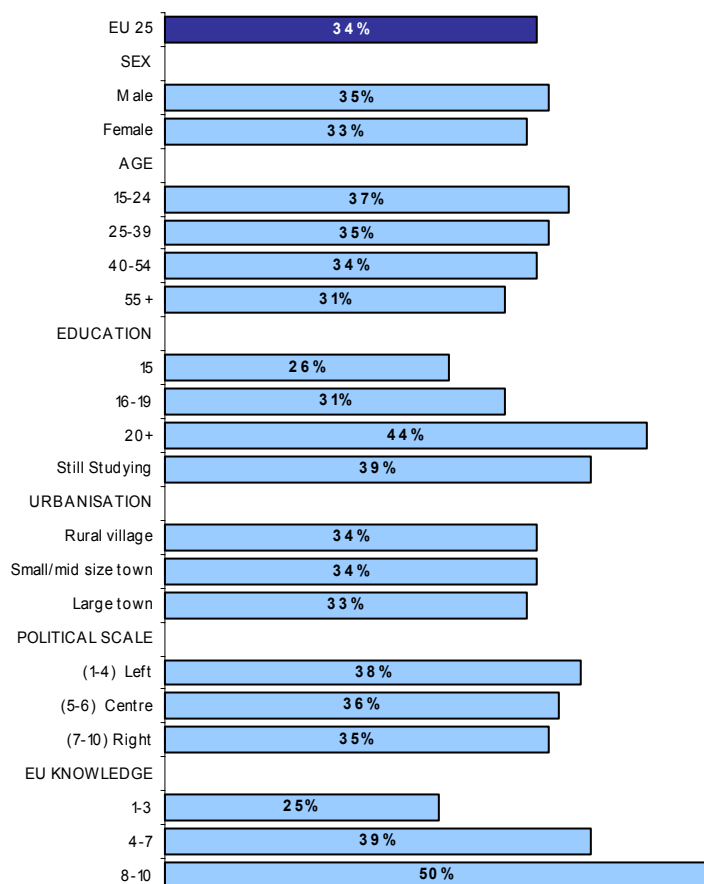

In the accession and candidate countries the mood is also more critical, particularly so in Turkey and Bulgaria.

My voice counts in the European Union

Citizens with a high self-perceived knowledge level about the European Union¹⁸, those who studied the longest, leaders of opinion¹⁹ and managers are more likely than other groups to believe that their voice counts in the European Union. Even among this group, however, many people feel that this is not the case.

My voice counts in the European Union % "tend to agree" - EU25

Finally, people with a positive image of the European Union (who feel that membership is a good thing and who trust the Union) are significantly more likely to feel that their voice counts than are citizens with a negative stance towards to European Union. It has to be pointed out, however, that even among those who have a positive image of the EU, only 50% consider that their voice counts.

% EU25	Voice counts	Voice does not count
Image of the EU is positive	50%	43%
Membership to the EU is good	48%	45%
Tends to trust the EU	48%	46%
Image of the EU is negative	13%	83%
Membership to the EU is bad	13%	82%
Tends not to trust the EU	22%	73%

¹⁸ QA20. Using this scale, how much do you feel you know about the European Union, its policies, its institutions? (1 = nothing at all, 10 = a great deal)..

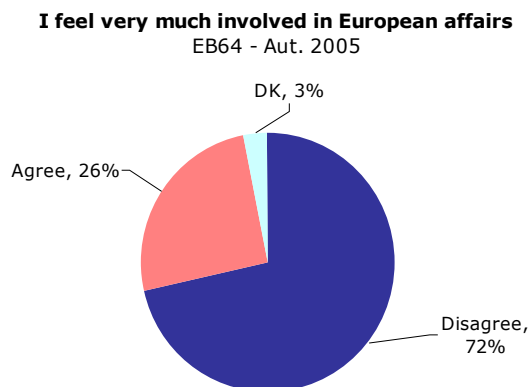

¹⁹ See the definition of this indicator in the introduction to this report.

1.3. Involvement in European affairs

Next we look at the perceived and desired involvement of citizens in European affairs²⁰.

- Few European citizens feel involved in European affairs and nearly half of them would like to be more involved -

Only just over a quarter of European citizens feel very much involved in European affairs (26%), whilst the majority feels this is not the case (72%).

An analysis of the socio-demographic variables shows that men (28%) are slightly more likely than women (23%) to feel very much involved but that there are no differences between the age categories. Leaders of opinion (40%), people who stayed in full-time education until the age of 20 or older (36%) and managers (35%) feel most involved in European affairs.

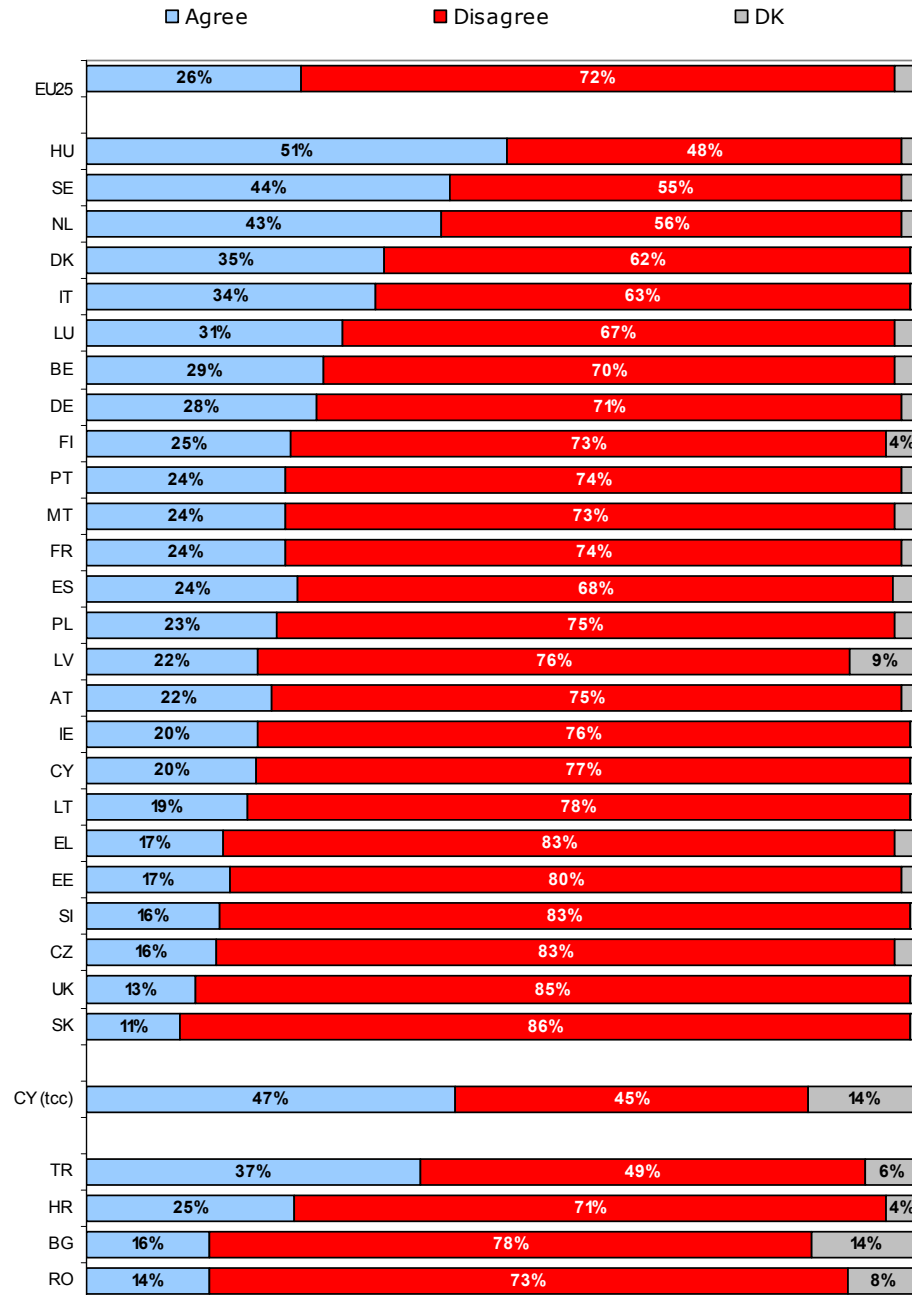

No significant differences are observed between people living in the 15 'old' Member States and people living in the 10 new Member States. A more detailed analysis of the country results shows that it is in Hungary where the strongest support for feeling involved in European Affairs (51%) is found. Sweden (44%) and the Netherlands (43%) are the only two other countries where this applies to more than two-fifth of the population. In Slovakia (11%) and the United Kingdom (13%) the percentage of people that feels involved is the lowest. Other countries where less than one-fifth of the population feels very much involved are the Czech Republic, Slovenia, Estonia, Greece and Lithuania.

²⁰ QA16 To what extent do you agree or disagree with each of the following?

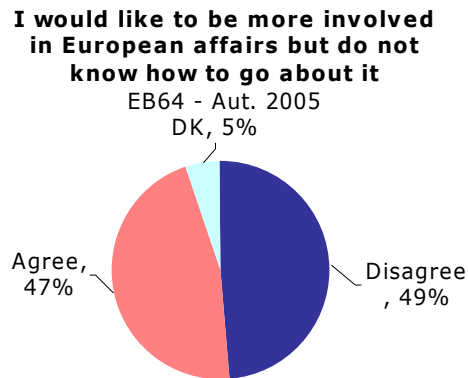

1 I feel very much involved in European affairs

2 I would like to be more involved in European affairs but I do not know how to go about it

I feel very much involved in European affairs - % EU

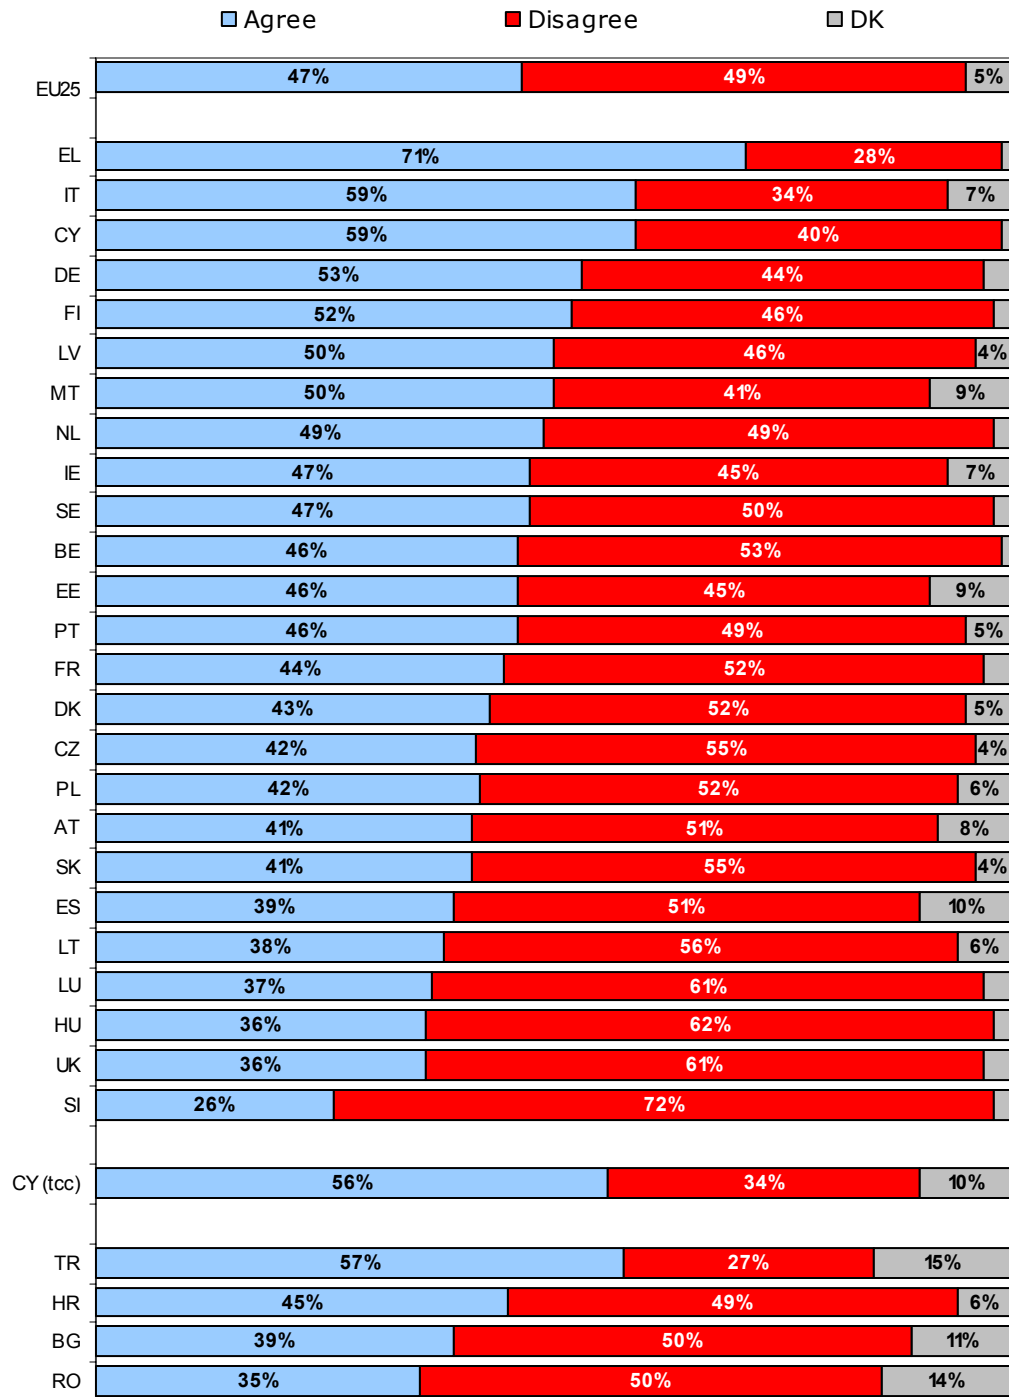

Close to half of the European citizens (47%) would like to be more involved in European affairs but do not know how to go about it, whilst 49% take the opposite view.

People who would like to be more involved in European affairs are more often than average students (58%), leaders of opinion (59%) and those who feel positive about the European Union (59%).

Views vary at the EU15/NMS level: citizens living in the 15 'old' Member States express a more widespread desire to be more involved than the citizens of the 10 new Member States (48% versus 41%). An inspection of the country results shows that the desire to be more involved is most widespread in Greece (71%), followed by Italy (59%) and Cyprus (59%). It is least widespread in Slovenia (26%).

I would like to be more involved in European affairs but I do not know how to go about it - % EU

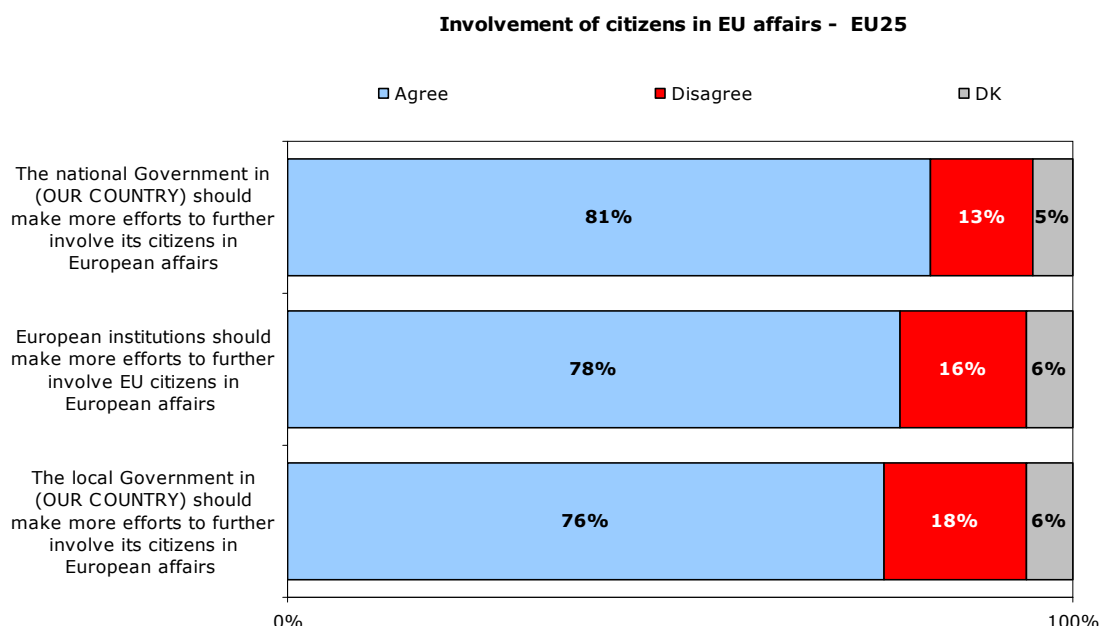

1.4. Who should make further efforts to involve citizens in European affairs?

Finally, we analyse the role played by the European Union as well as national and local governments to further involve citizens in European affairs²¹.

- All levels of government should make more efforts to further involve citizens in European affairs -

There is widespread consensus among the European public that all levels of government, be they local, national or European, should make more efforts to further involve citizens in European affairs.

Focusing firstly on the European institutions, the results show that close to 8 out of 10 European citizens believe they should make more efforts. In the Netherlands and Greece, this view is held by approximately 9 out of 10 citizens (91% and 89%, respectively). At 68%, Portugal is the only country where less than 7 out of 10 people feel that the European institutions should make more efforts to involve its citizens in European affairs.

The expectation that national governments should make more efforts is expressed by 81% of the respondents. This varies from 71% in Spain and 74% in Austria to at least 90% in Malta, Greece, Cyprus and the Netherlands.

Over three-quarters of the European citizens expect efforts from local government (76%) on this issue. This ranges from 66% in Luxembourg and 67% in the Netherlands to 89% in Greece and Malta and 91% in Cyprus.

²¹ QA16 To what extent do you agree or disagree with each of the following?

3 European institutions should make more efforts to further involve EU citizens in European affairs

4 The national Government in (OUR COUNTRY) should make more efforts to further involve EU citizens in European affairs

5 The local Government in (OUR COUNTRY) should make more efforts to further involve EU citizens in European affairs

2. Citizenship and the meaning of the European Union

In this chapter we analyse the concept of European citizenship, today and in the future. We also look at the extent to which citizens are proud to be European. However, we begin by addressing the following issues that are important to better understand public opinion with regards to European Union citizenship, namely:

- ◆ What the European Union represents to its citizens?
- ◆ What are the feelings inspired by the European Union?

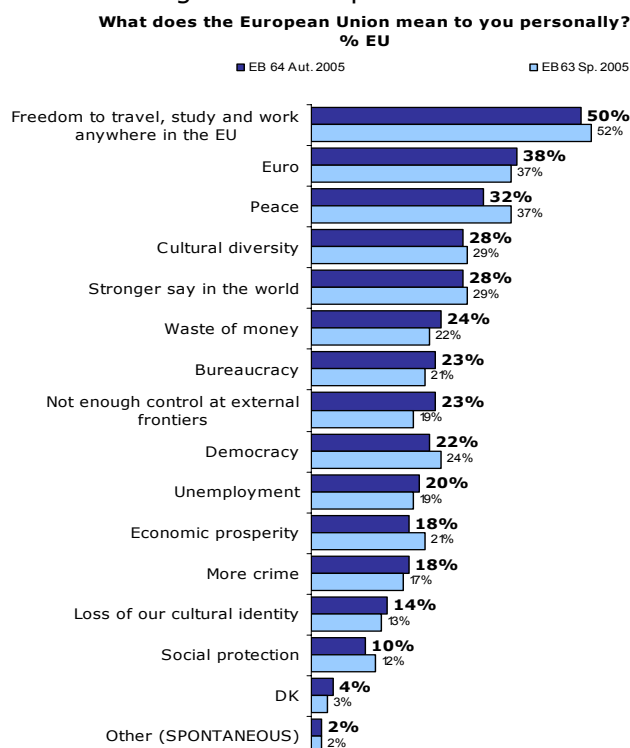

2.1. What the European Union means to citizens?

- The European Union associated to the freedom of movement -

In the context of the European Year of workers' mobility, it is worth noting that, to its citizens, the European Union means first of all freedom of movement (to travel, study and work) within the European Union. Half of the surveyed respondents referred to this freedom (50%, -2 points compared with last spring)²². The euro comes next with a score of 38% (+1 point), followed by peace, with a score of 32% (-5 points). For more than a quarter of its citizens, the European Union means a stronger say in the world (28%, -1 point), cultural diversity (also 28% and -1 point).

For slightly less than a quarter of its citizens, the European Union is synonymous with democracy (22%, -2 points). Ahead of this sentiment now come three negative feelings: waste of money (24%, +2 points), bureaucracy (23%, +2 points) and not enough control at external borders (23%, +4 points).

The above analyses point to a more negative stance in comparison to spring 2005 when it comes to the meaning of the European Union.

²² QA13. What does the European Union mean to you personally?

2.2. Feelings inspired by the European Union

After having examined what the European Union means to its citizens, we shall now focus on the feelings that it inspires to its citizens²³.

- Hope is the most frequently named feeling inspired by the European Union -

When respondents are read out 7 kinds of feelings (of which three are positive, three clearly negative and one more neutral) that the European Union could give people personally, hope is mentioned most frequently. In autumn 2005, it is mentioned by 42% of respondents. This percentage is lower than it was in 2004 but still higher than the score recorded at the end of 2003 (38%).

Next, the European Union inspires trust for 22% of the persons interviewed. That score has not changed since last spring.

The least positive feelings with regard to the European Union, namely anxiety and mistrust have also not changed significantly, with anxiety scoring 21% and mistrust 20% (respectively + 1 point since last wave).

The feeling of indifference towards the European Union has also remained stable at 19%. The two most extreme feelings – enthusiasm on the one hand and rejection on the other – are chosen by very few respondents (6% and 5%, respectively).

In conclusion, we can note that positive feelings decreased a little since last measurement.

²³ QA14. Does the European Union give you personally the feeling of...?

2.3. European citizenship

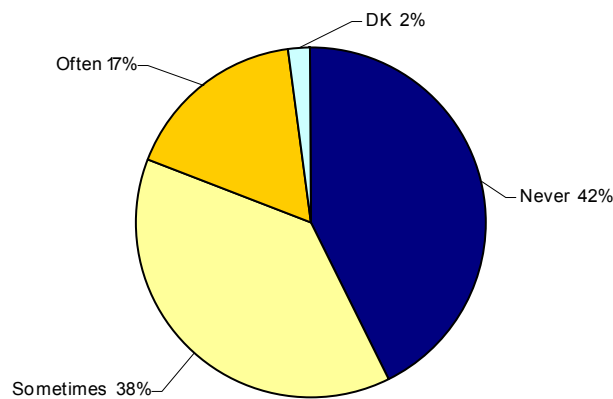

Next we examine to what extent the European public identifies with European citizenship in an enlarged Union consisting of 25 Member States and to what extent they feel proud to be European.

2.3.1. The concept of European Citizenship

- Concept of European citizenship more embedded in mind of Europeans -

In early 1992, 14% of the citizens living in the 12 Member States that together formed the European Community²⁴ often thought of themselves not only as their own nationality, but also as European. Around a third of the EC citizens did this sometimes (32%) but for the majority (51%) European citizenship was not something they identified with. Now, 14 years later and in a Union that consists of twice as many countries, the concept of European Union citizenship seems more embedded in the mind of its citizens: 17% of citizens often think of themselves as European and 38% do this sometimes. The proportion that never does this has fallen from 51% to 42%²⁵.

Do you ever think of yourself as not only (NATIONALITY),
but also European? %EU

²⁴ In addition to the ten new Member States, Austria, Finland and Sweden had also not yet joined the Union at that time.

²⁵ QA39. Do you think of yourself as only (NATIONALITY), but also European? Does this happen often, sometimes or never?

The first thing to note is that people in the 10 new Member States are, on average, slightly more likely to identify with the concept of European citizenship. The inclusion of these new countries partially explains the noted increase in the level of identification since 1992. However, an analysis of the results in the 12 EC countries shows that in most, the notion of European citizenship now also receives more widespread recognition than it did back in 1992. This is particularly true in Denmark (62% vs. 50%), Germany (58% vs. 27%), Ireland (53% vs. 35%), Luxembourg (72% vs. 61%) and the Netherlands 58% vs. 39%). The noted exception is Portugal where a significant increase in the percentage of people who never think of themselves as European has been recorded (from 32% to 41%). The United Kingdom remains the country where people are least likely to identify with European Union citizenship. This was true in 1992 in a Community of 12 nations but also holds today in a Union of 25 Members.

Do you ever think of yourself as not only (NATIONALITY), but also European?
Does this happen often, sometimes or never?

In the three countries that joined the Union in 1995, the concept of European citizenship is most widely accepted in Finland, where 63% of the respondents often or sometimes see themselves as European. In Austria, the results (57%) are slightly over the overall average (55%) and in Sweden, the proportion of people who never think of themselves as European is slightly above average (46%) though the majority of Swedes do, to some extent, think of themselves as European.

Focusing next on the ten new Member States shows that the highest level of identification with European Union citizenship is attained in Poland and Slovakia, where nearly two out of three respondents often or sometimes think of themselves as European. In the Czech Republic (49%) and Estonia (51%), this sentiment is least widespread.

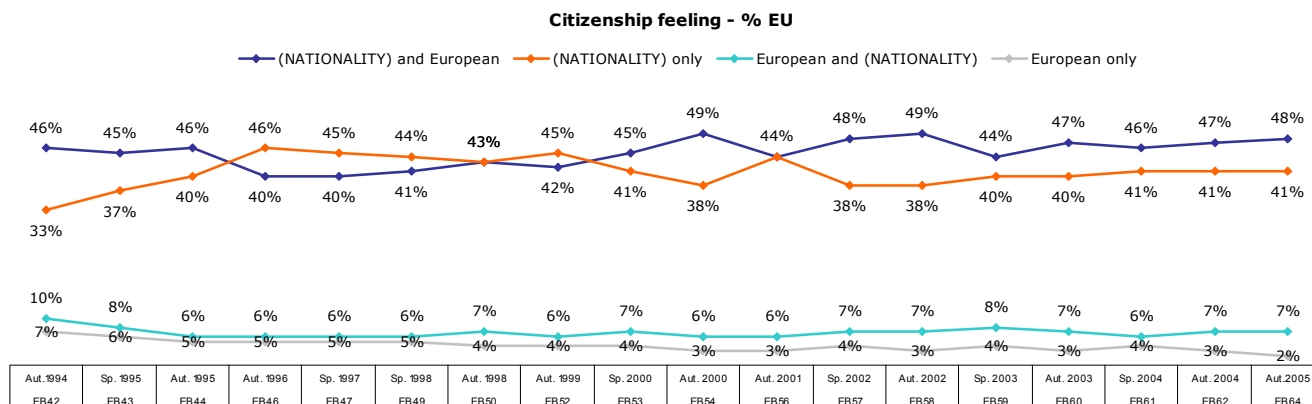

In the four countries that are preparing to join the European Union, the concept of European citizenship is most embedded in Croatia, where more than 6 out of 10 respondents often (22%) or sometimes (42%) think of themselves as European. In Turkey, on the other hand, the majority of people – 68% – never think of themselves as European.

2.3.2. European citizenship in the near future

Next, the results for the standard measurement of European citizenship are analysed. The standard measurement focuses on the extent to which European Union citizens see themselves in the near future as citizens of their country and/or citizens of the European Union²⁶.

- No change as regards feelings of national and European citizenship -

In autumn 2005, 48% of European Union citizens see themselves as citizens of both their country and Europe, while 41% of the interviewees see themselves only as "national" citizens. People who see themselves as "European and a citizen of their country" represent 7% of the population interviewed and people who see themselves as only European represent a marginal percentage (2%). These results are more or less unchanged from last year.

²⁶ QA40 In the near future, do you see yourself...?

A socio-demographic analysis of the responses indicates people who left full-time education aged 20 or older form the group with the highest proportion of people feeling to some degree European (59%) whereas those who left full-time education before the age of 16 form the group with the highest percentage of people who identify themselves solely with their nationality (56%).

Analysis of the country results shows that at 68% (+11 points since autumn 2004), it is in Malta that the largest proportion of respondents seeing themselves as national citizens and Europeans in the near future, can be found. This is in sharp contrast to the United Kingdom where 63% (+8 points) of the people identify themselves only with their own nationality.

Another noteworthy shift has occurred in Luxembourg, where for the first time the percentage of people who see themselves as solely European has fallen below the 10 percent mark (9%, down from 17% in autumn 2004). However, this is still the highest score among the Member States.

Furthermore, the vast majority of respondents in Turkey once again see themselves as solely Turkish citizens (74%, +2 points).

2.4. European pride

Alongside the feeling of European citizenship, the Eurobarometer examines the extent to which the respondents are proud to be European²⁷.

While the percentage of citizens who last year indicated that they were proud to be European had increased significantly, European pride has now returned to a level more in line with previous measurements.

A more detailed analysis of European pride shows that only 12% of the respondents are "very proud" (-4 points since autumn 2004) to be European and 51% are "fairly proud". More than a quarter of the respondents indicate that they are not proud to be European (27% in total).

²⁷ QA42 And would you say you are very proud, fairly proud, not very proud, not at all proud to be European?

- Greater European pride in the new Member States -

On average, citizens living in the 10 new Member States are more likely to feel proud to be European than their counterparts in the 15 'old' Member States (73% versus 61%). However, a closer inspection of the country results reveals a more diverse picture. The level of pride in being European is highest in Slovakia (78%), Slovenia and Italy (both 77%). However, significant shifts since last year mean that the rank order of countries is now very different. Hungary has fallen from being the country with the broadest level of pride to fifth place (76%, -10 points). Malta is the only country where levels of pride increased (70%, +5 points) and with the exception of 8 other countries where public opinion stayed more or less stable, levels of European pride are now lower than they were in autumn 2004.

And would you say you are very proud, fairly proud, not very proud, not at all proud to be European?

Among the four countries waiting to join the European Union, the highest level of European pride is still measured in Romania though it has fallen from 83% to 72%. In Turkey, there is an increased doubt among the public as to whether they are European or not: 23% of the respondents have indicated that they do not feel European, up from 7% in autumn 2004.

The data point to a clear relationship between European pride and how people score on the main indicators of the Eurobarometer. 79% of people that consider their country's membership to the European Union a good thing are proud to be European, compared to only 35% of those who regard their country's membership as a bad thing. Equally, 82% of people with a positive image of the EU are proud, compared to only 32% of those with a negative image of the European Union.

3. Being a member of the European Union today

The Eurobarometer always attaches particular importance to what membership of the European Union means to the respondents. Several questions are used to measure public opinion in this regard:

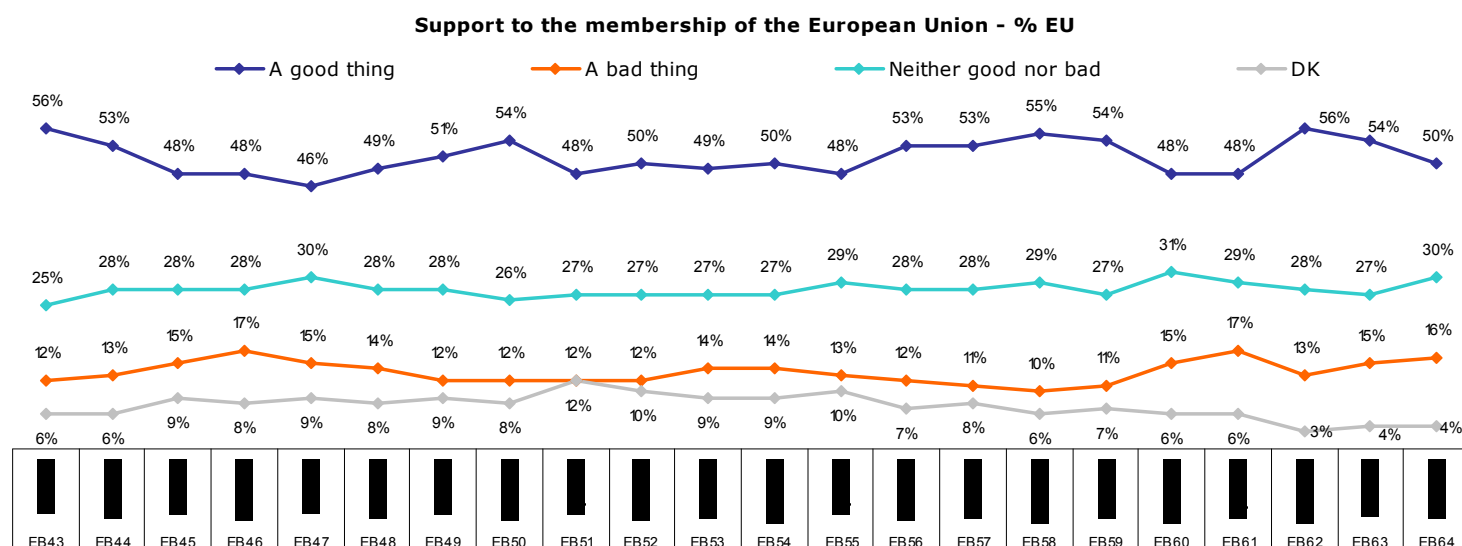

- ◆ Support for membership of the European Union;
- ◆ The perceived advantages of membership;
- ◆ The image that citizens have of the European Union;

3.1. Membership of the European Union: a good thing?

3.1.1. In the Member States

- Decline in support for European Union membership -

After the significant increase recorded in autumn 2004 following the accession of 10 new Member States, the view that one country's membership to the European Union is a good thing has decreased from 54% to 50%²⁸.

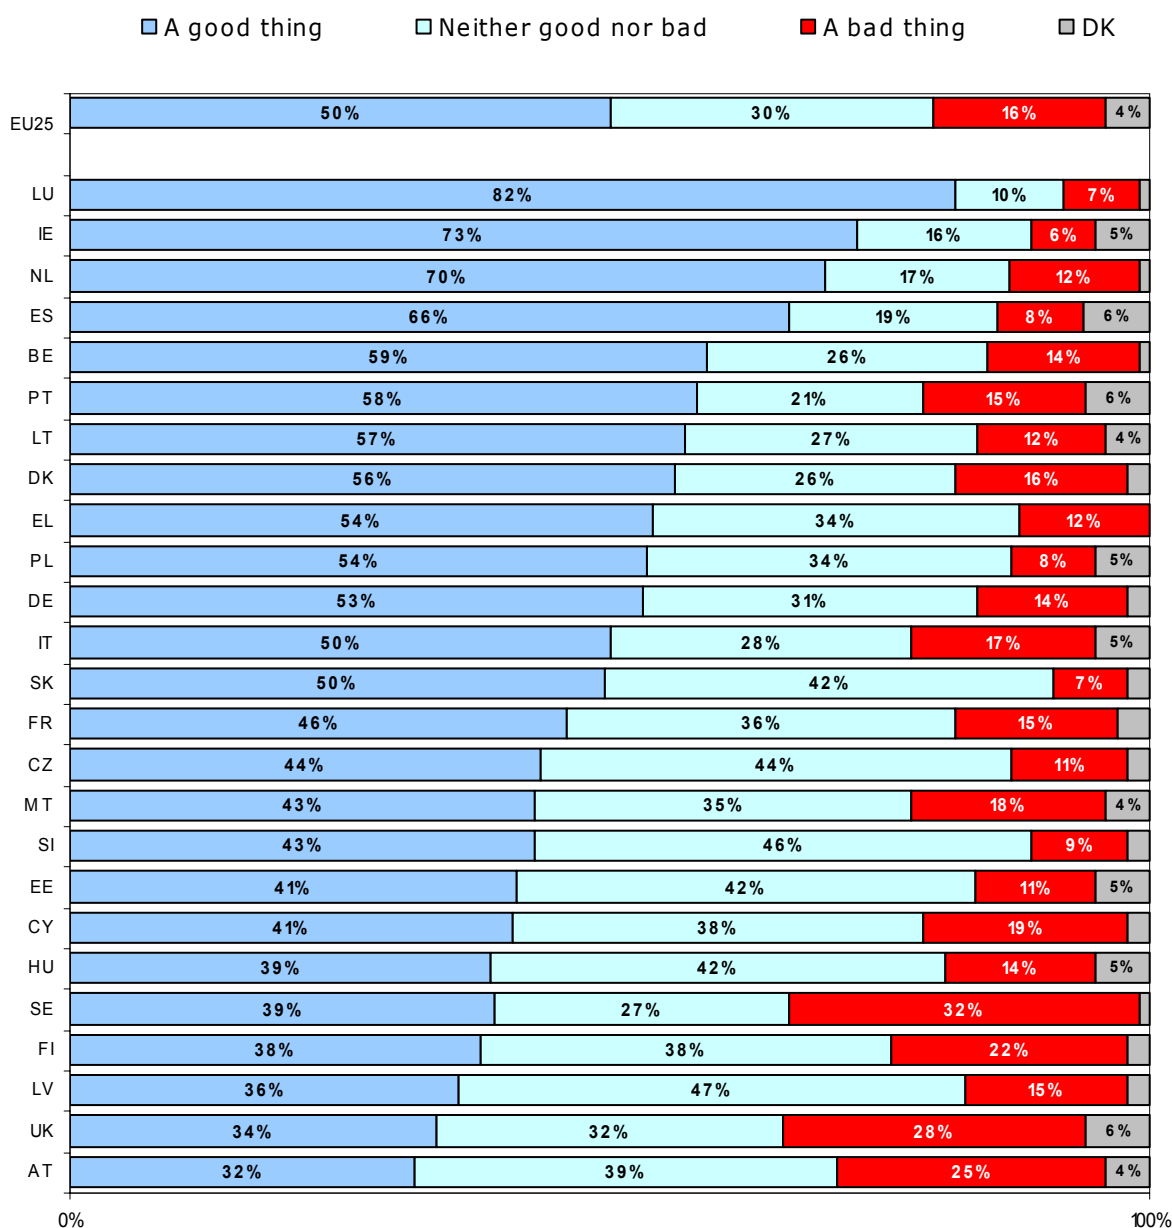

However, at 16%, opposition to membership to the European Union remains low. Negative opinions only exceed 20% of the surveyed population in the countries which are traditionally more sceptical about the building of Europe, namely Sweden (32%), the United Kingdom (28%), Austria (25%) and Finland (22%).

²⁸ QA8. Generally speaking, do you think that (OUR COUNTRY)'s membership of the European Union is...? - a good thing - a bad thing - neither good nor bad

The much-noted cleavages in public opinion between Member States continue to exist:

- ◆ In the countries that are part of the euro zone, there generally is broad consensus that membership of the European Union is a good thing for them (54%). The six countries with highest support levels are all euro zone members, headed by Luxembourg (82%).
- ◆ Two euro zone countries – Austria and Finland – form a clear exception and are generally grouped together with the UK and Sweden as countries where the majority of people are sceptical about the European Union.
- ◆ In the new Member States, public opinion remains somewhat volatile and the level of “neutral” replies in these countries is particularly high. This is particularly true in Latvia (47%), Slovenia (46%), the Czech Republic (44%), Estonia, Hungary and Slovakia (all 42%).

Support to the membership of the European Union

A country analysis of the shifts in the percentages since the previous survey shows the following developments:

- ◆ No significant shifts or only very minor shifts took place since spring 2005 in Spain, Ireland, Cyprus, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Hungary, Malta, Poland and the United Kingdom.
- ◆ A shift away from outright support and towards more neutral opinions has been recorded in the Czech Republic, Denmark, Germany, Estonia, France, Italy, Slovenia and Slovakia. In Greece, recorded increases in neutral opinions are not mirrored by a decrease in outright support.
- ◆ In Belgium, support for membership clearly dropped and is accompanied by a significant increase in opposition. The same applies to a lesser extent to the Netherlands, Finland, Sweden, Latvia and Portugal. In Austria, the significant drop of 5 points is not accompanied by a significant increase in levels of opposition and public opinion is now more diffuse.

As is well known, people's attitudes about their country's membership of the European Union also vary depending on a number of socio-demographic characteristics and attitudes. The most important socio-demographic determinants, which are to a certain degree interrelated, are highlighted below:

- ♦ Education: people who studied longer and those who are still students, are more inclined than the others to see their country's membership of the European Union as a good thing.
- ♦ Age: the younger the respondents, the more they support their country's membership of the European Union.
- ♦ Gender: men are traditionally more likely than women to perceive their country's membership of the European Union positively.
- ♦ Degree of urbanisation: people living in urban areas support European Union membership more than citizens living in rural areas.
- ♦ Self-perceived knowledge of the EU: support for European Union membership is stronger among those who consider that their knowledge of European affairs is good or very good.

3.1.2. In the accession and candidate countries

The question regarding support of membership of the European Union was worded slightly differently in the accession and candidate countries on the basis of projected benefits: "Generally speaking, do you think that (OUR COUNTRY)'s membership of the European Union will be a good thing, a bad thing or neither good nor bad?" ²⁹

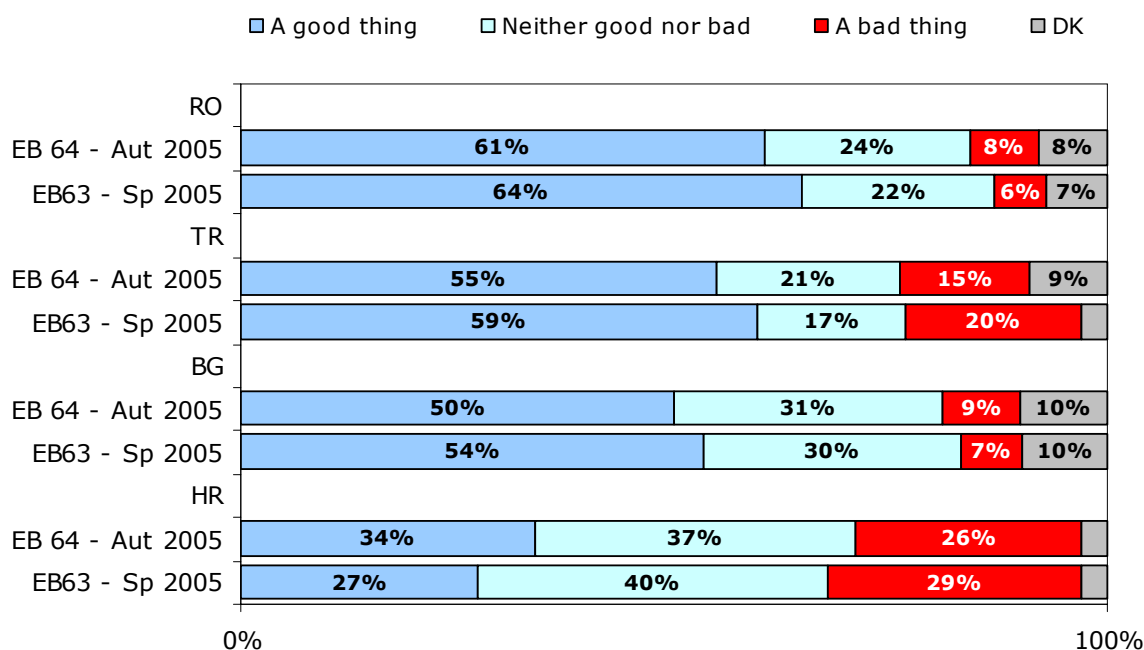

- Slight drop in support for future membership in Romania and Bulgaria; less opposition in Croatia and Turkey -

In both Romania and Bulgaria, support for future EU membership continues to drop slightly as the timetable for accession comes closer. However, the majority of citizens in these four countries still regard future accession to the European Union as a good thing for their country.

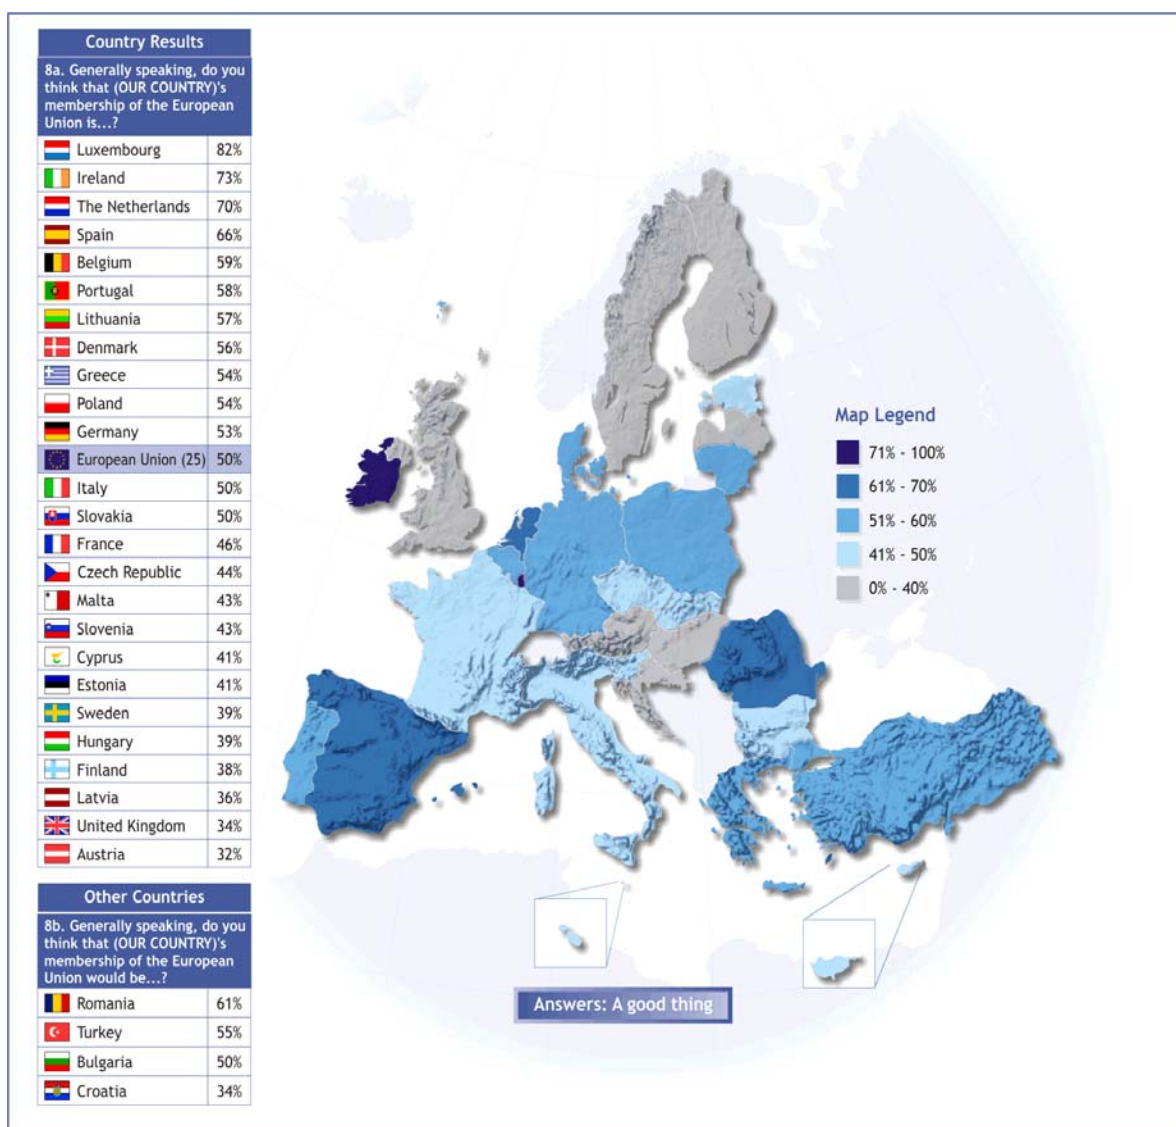

In Turkey, the figures point to a move towards a more neutral attitude. The increase in neutral views (21%, +4 points) is accompanied by a decrease in both the level of support (55%, -4 points) and the level of opposition (15%, -5 points). However, at 55% support for their country's future European Union membership remains widespread in Turkey.

The development in Croatia is positive. Though it is the country where support is still least widespread, those who regard their country's possible membership to the European Union as a good thing (34%, +7 points) now clearly outnumber the opponents of a future membership (26%, -3 points).

3.2. The advantages of membership

3.2.1. In the Member States

- Slight drop in support for the perceived advantages of EU membership -

After a steady increase in positive responses over the past two years reaching the highest level since 1991, a decrease of 3 points has now been recorded in the percentage of European citizens who feel that their country has benefited from European Union membership. Today, public opinion is more polarised: 52% of Europeans consider that on the whole their country has benefited from European Union membership, compared to 36% (+3 points) who take the opposite view. Despite this shift, public opinion remains positive with a difference of 16 points between those who feel their country has benefited and those who feel their country has not benefited³⁰.

Once again, Ireland has the highest score in terms of citizens who perceive positively the advantages of membership of the European Union (86%), followed by Luxembourg (75%).

Eighteen months after accession, public opinion concerning the perceived benefits of membership remains positive in the new Member States. On average, close to 6 out of 10 respondents (58%) declare that their country has benefited from being a member of the European Union, with the highest scores once again recorded in Lithuania (70%). Cypriots remain the most critical. Only 39% feel that their country has benefited from membership, while 53% hold the opposite view.

³⁰ QA9a. Taking everything into consideration, would you say that (OUR COUNTRY) has on balance benefited or not from being a member of the European Union?

In the 15 old Member States, more than half of the citizens continue to feel that their country has benefited from membership (51%). After Ireland and Luxembourg, this view is shared by at least 6 out of 10 people in Denmark, Spain (both 69%), Greece (67%), Belgium, Portugal (both 65%) and the Netherlands (61%).

Sweden is the only 'old' Member State where more than half of the people feel their country has not benefited from European Union membership (56%). However, in Austria (48%), the United Kingdom and Finland (both 47%), this is also the majority view.

A country analysis of the shifts in the percentages since the previous survey shows the following developments:

- ◆ Focusing firstly on the two countries, which in their referenda voted against the Constitution, a slight increase in the feeling that their country has not benefited from EU membership has been recorded (+4 points). In both the Netherlands and France, two important issues that are directly related to the perceived advantages of membership – contributions to the budget in the Netherlands and CAP subsidies in France – have been the focus of political debate just prior to the survey. Thus, rather than linking the recorded shift to the 'no' vote in the referenda, these events must be taken in consideration when trying to understand the change in public opinion.
- ◆ In Latvia, Sweden, the United Kingdom, Belgium, Finland, Italy, Germany, and Hungary a significant drop in positive responses has been accompanied by a significant increase in negative responses.
- ◆ In Greece, a significant increase in negative responses has been recorded but this shift is not mirrored by a significant decrease in positive responses.
- ◆ In Austria and Slovenia, a significant decrease in positive responses has been recorded but this shift is not mirrored by a significant increase in negative responses.
- ◆ Finally, a significant positive development has been recorded in Luxembourg.

As is the case for the support for membership, from a socio-demographic point of view, the citizens who most perceive the advantages of their country's membership of the European Union are above all students (67%), young people (64%), people who stayed in full-time education the longest (64%), managers (62%), people who position themselves on the left of the political scale (57%), men (56%) and people living in urban areas (55%).

3.2.2. In the accession and candidate countries

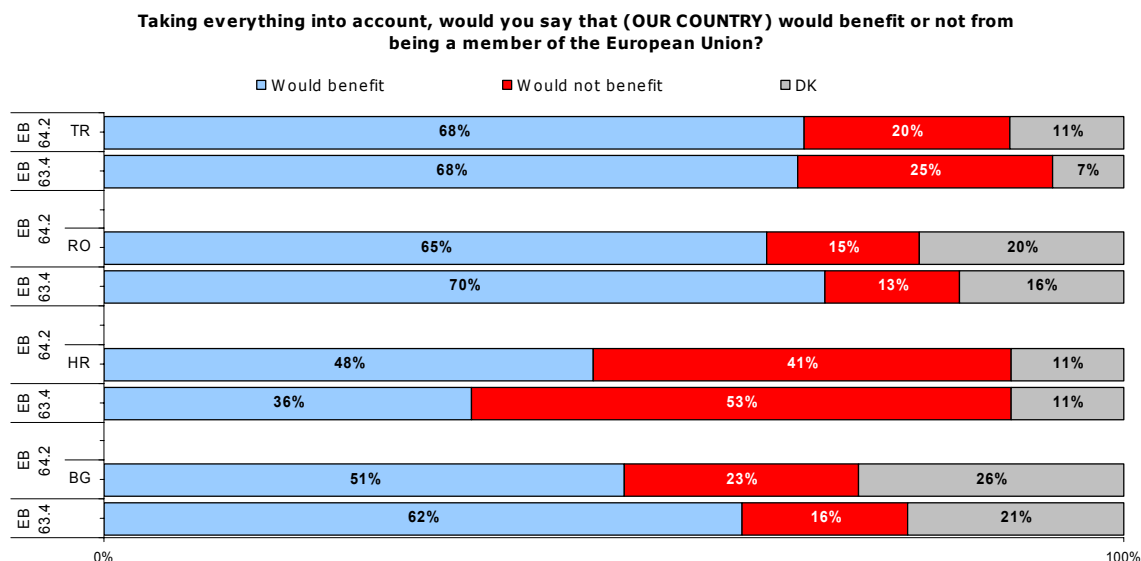

The question on the probable advantages to be gained from their future membership of the European Union was also worded differently in the accession and candidate countries: "Taking everything into consideration, would you say that (OUR COUNTRY) would benefit or not from being a member of the European Union?".³¹

- Expectations in terms of the advantages to be gained from European Union membership are now highest in Turkey -

Whilst in spring 2005 expectations were most widespread in Romania, this has now fallen by 5 points to 65% making Turkey the country where the view that their country would benefit from membership most widespread (68%, no change since spring 2005).

A more critical stance is also visible in Bulgaria where 51% of citizens now believe that their country will benefit from being a member of the European Union, down from 62% in spring 2005.

Finally, although respondents in Croatia are still the most sceptical a considerable improvement has been recorded in this country with 48% of respondents now indicating that their country would benefit from membership, up from 36% in spring 2005.

³¹ QA9b.

3.2.3. Advantages of membership (or future membership) to the European Union

Next we analyse the extent to which European citizens feel that membership of the European Union has positive or negative effects on a range of important national issues³².

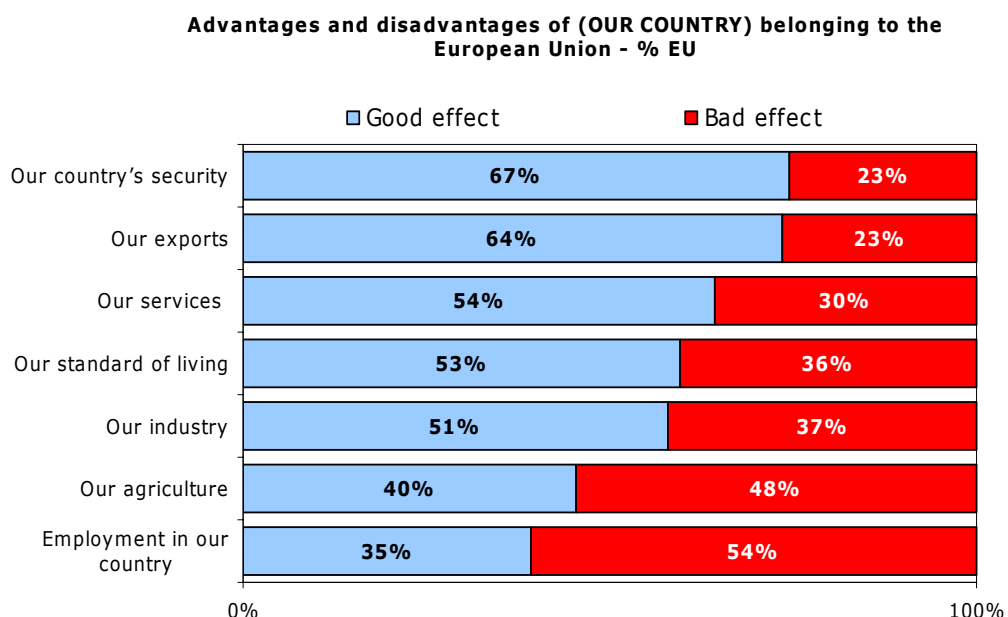

- Majority view is that membership has positive effect on national security, exports, services and standard of living -

In general, over half of European citizens believe that belonging to the European Union is good for the standard of living in their country (53%). However, more than a third feels that EU membership has a bad effect on the standard of living in their country (36%).

More generally, two-thirds of European citizens are of the view that belonging to the European Union has good effects on their country's security (67%), affirming the widespread support that exists for the Union's common security and defence policy³³.

Equally, close to two-thirds of European citizens believe that EU membership is good for their country's exports (64%). Positive effects are also noted for the services branch (54%) and for industry (51%).

European citizens are much more critical when it comes to employment and agriculture. The majority view is that belonging to the European Union has a bad effect on these two areas.

³² QA10a. People disagree about the advantages or disadvantage of (OUR COUNTRY) belonging to the European Union. I am going to read out some points and, for each one, I would like you to tell me if (OUR COUNTRY) being in the European Union has a very good, fairly good, bad or very bad effect?

³³ Support for the CSDP is discussed in Part III, chapter 2 of this report

Analysis of the national results reveals large variations between the Member States. The feeling that membership has a good effect on national security is significantly more widespread among citizens in the ten new Member States (76%) than is the case in the 15 'old' Member States (65%). This view is most widespread in Slovenia (81%), Cyprus and the Czech Republic (both 80%). People in the United Kingdom are the least likely (44%) to find that their country has benefited from membership to the European Union in terms of national security.

The view that EU membership has had a good effect on the standard of living in one's country is held by over 50% of citizens in 18 of the 25 Member States, with the most widespread affirmation recorded in Ireland (87%). In Germany and Austria, public opinion is divided on this issue, whereas in France, Hungary and even more so in Latvia, the majority view is that EU membership has a bad effect on the standard of living in these countries.

In terms of exports, attitudes are slightly more positive in the old Member States than in the new Member States (64% versus 60%, respectively). Views are most positive in Denmark, where 88% say that EU membership has had a good effect on their country's exports. Public opinion is least positive in Malta (46%).

When it comes to services, public opinion is generally somewhat more positive in the new Member States than in the old Member States (58% versus 53%, respectively). Views are particularly positive in Ireland (75%), Belgium (73%) and Estonia (71%) but fairly critical in the United Kingdom (45%), Germany and Sweden (both 45%).

Industry has benefited according to 80% of people in Denmark and 78% of people in Ireland. On the other hand, in Slovenia (54%), Cyprus (52%), Greece (51%), Portugal (51%) and France (50%) the majority view is that EU membership has had a bad effect on industry in these countries.

The view that EU membership has a good effect on agriculture is most widespread in Ireland (62%) and Poland (61%). On the other hand, in Finland (79%) and the Czech Republic (74%) around three-quarters of citizens hold the opposite view.

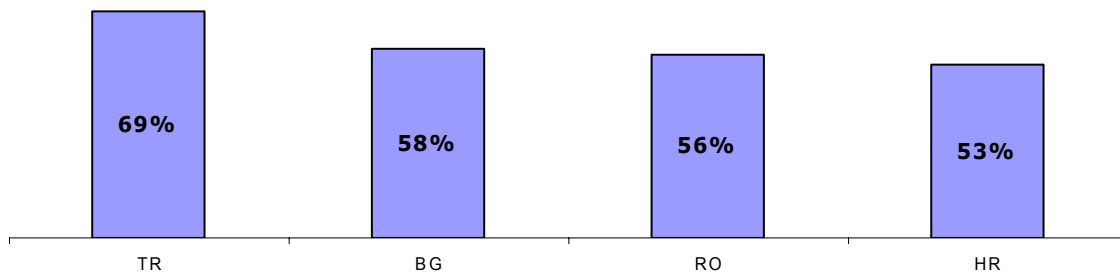

In seven Member States – most notably Ireland (79%) and Lithuania (62%), those who feel that EU membership has a positive effect on employment outnumber those who think the opposite. On the other hand, in Germany (75%) and France (71%) the view that EU membership has a bad effect on employment is widespread.

We next briefly examine public opinion in the accession and candidate countries. Here, the question has been worded slightly differently to take account of the fact that these countries are not (yet) members of the European Union³⁴.

The people living in the countries waiting to join the European Union are significantly more optimistic than current Member States about the possible effects on the seven areas measured in the survey. The gap is particularly large when it comes to employment. In these four countries, 64% of the people on average, compared to an average of 35% in the Member States, hold the view that EU membership would have a good effect on employment.

3.3. The European Union's image

- Less citizens have a positive image of the European Union -

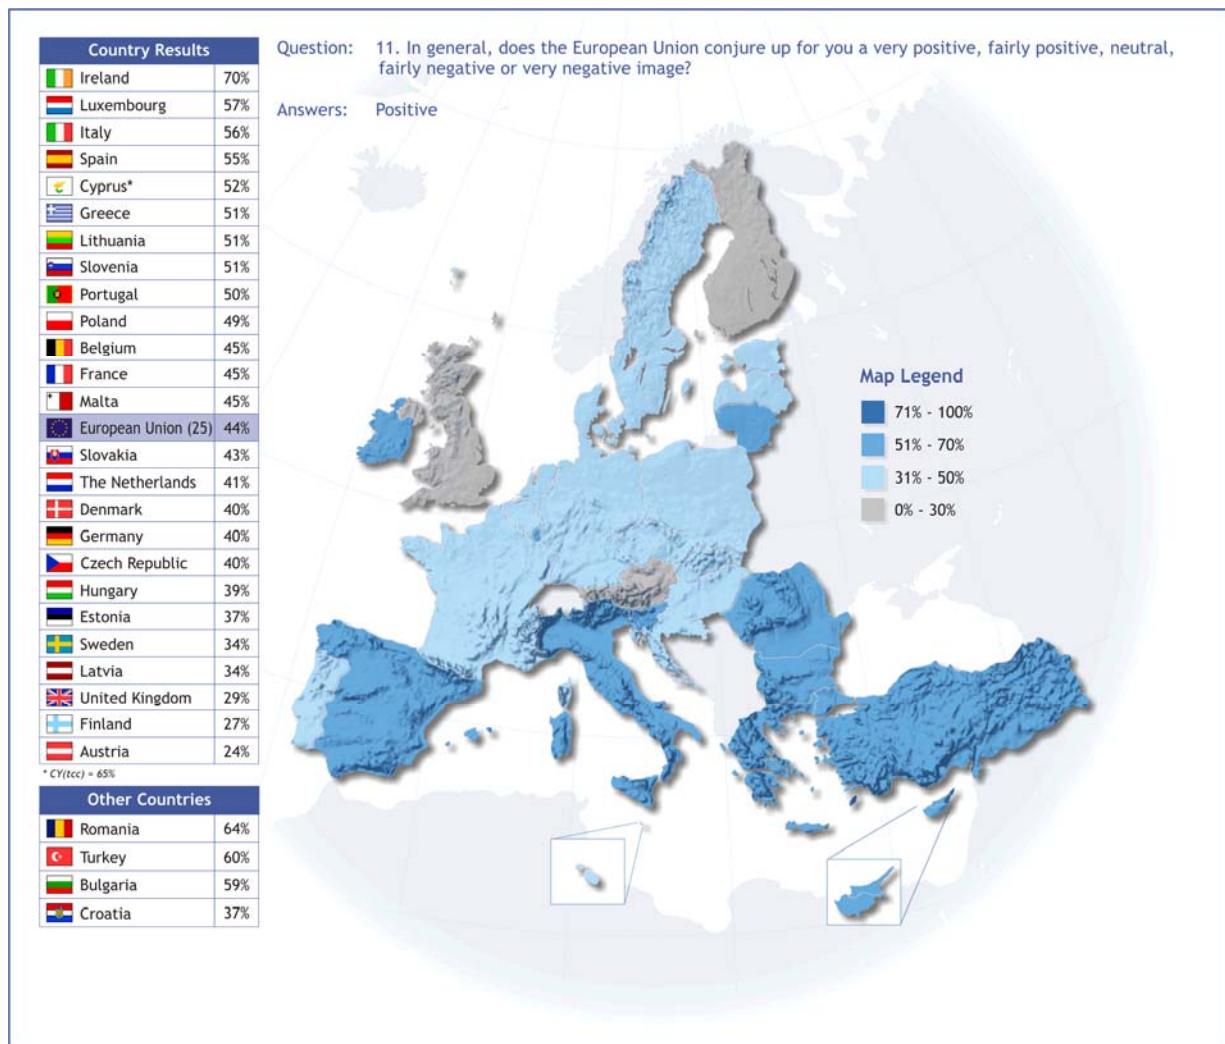

Support for the view that the image of the European Union is positive has gone down for the second consecutive time and now stands at 44%. Although EU citizens for whom the European Union conjures up a positive image continue to outnumber those for whom the Union conjures up a negative image, the gap between the two camps is narrowing³⁵.

A country analysis of the shifts in the percentages since the previous survey shows the following developments:

- ◆ In Denmark a positive development has been recorded, with a 5 points increase in the percentage of people with a positive image of the European Union. In the Netherlands, a small increase in positive responses has been recorded.
- ◆ Public opinion has not shifted significantly in Ireland, the United Kingdom, Luxembourg, Estonia, Poland and Germany.
- ◆ A shift from positive responses towards more neutral opinions has been recorded in Italy, Portugal, France, Spain, Malta and the Czech Republic.
- ◆ In Sweden and Greece negative responses increased but these are not mirrored by significant decreases in positive responses.
- ◆ In the other countries the development is negative. That is to say, significant decreases in positive responses are mirrored by significant increases in negative responses.

³⁵ QA11. In general, does the European Union conjure up for you a very positive, fairly positive, neutral, fairly negative or very negative image?

Analysis of the European Union's image is not only relevant within the Member States but also as regards the perception of citizens in the accession and candidate countries. This analysis reveals that in the accession and candidate countries the European Union generally conjures up a positive image among more people than is the case within most of the Member States. The only exception is Croatia, although a significant improvement has been recorded in that country. Whereas in spring 2005 only 28% of Croatians had a positive image of the European Union, this now stands at 37%.

4. The European institutions

This part of the report first looks at the extent to which European citizens have heard of the European institutions and then analyses the level of trust citizens have in these institutions, focusing in particular on the European Parliament and the European Commission.

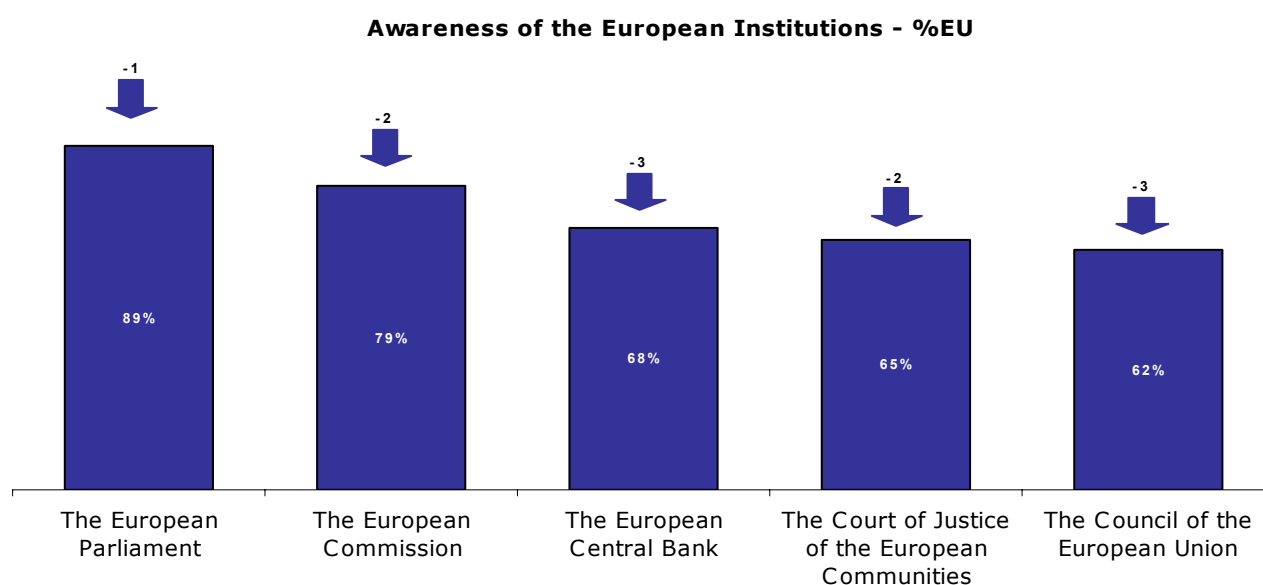

4.1. Awareness of the European institutions

- The European Parliament: the most widely known institution -

With a score of 89%, the European Parliament is once again the most widely heard of European institution, though awareness levels are slightly lower than they were six months ago (-1 point)³⁶.

The European Parliament is followed by the European Commission (79%, -2 points since spring 2005), the European Central Bank (68%, -3 points), the Court of Justice (65%, -2 points) and the Council of Ministers (62%, -3 points). The Committee of the Regions is still the least known institution (25%, -3 points since autumn 2004).

With the exception of the European Ombudsman, whom 37% (no change since autumn 2004) of European citizens have heard of, awareness levels are now slightly less widespread than they were at the end of 2004.

4.2. Trust in the European institutions

We now briefly examine the level of trust that citizens have in the various European institutions³⁷, before analysing in detail changes in the levels of trust in the European Commission and the European Parliament.

- Levels of trust continue their negative trend -

The level of trust among European citizens for the European institutions has fallen since spring 2005. For a few of the institutions, the drop in awareness levels has resulted in an increased inability among the public to make a judgement about trust. However, for most of the institutions, including the Parliament, the Commission and the Central Bank, an outright shift has been noted towards less trust.

Compared to spring 2005, the European Parliament is now the only institution that is trusted by just over half of European citizens (51%, -1 point), followed by the Court of Justice (48%, -4 points) and the European Commission (46%, unchanged).

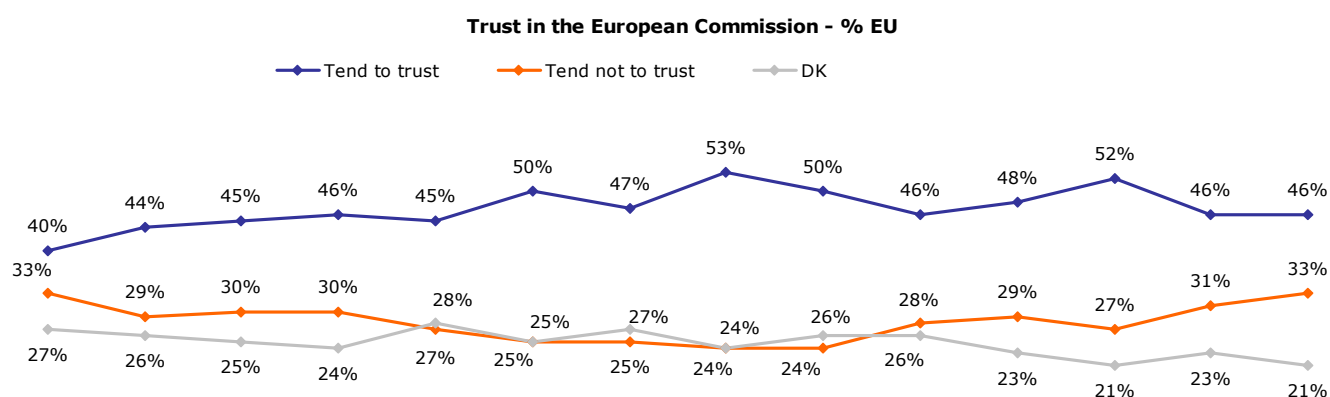

³⁷ QA27. And for each of them, please tell me if you tend to trust it or tend not to trust it?

4.2.1. The European Commission

- Trust in the European Commission further erodes -

Although the decline in trust levels in the European Commission that was recorded in the first half of 2005 has not continued, the latest results point to a further rise in the proportion of citizens who tend not to trust the European Commission. The percentage of people who tend to trust this institution still stands at the level recorded in autumn 2003 (46%), whereas the percentage of people who tend not to trust it is now as high as in spring 1999. The difference between positive and negative opinions, however, remains positive though the gap is becoming smaller and now stands at 13 points (compared with 25 in autumn 2004).

4.2.2. The European Parliament

- Less trust in the European Parliament -

The development recorded for the European Commission equally applies to the European Parliament: although a majority of respondents (51%) continue to trust the European Parliament, the percentage that tends not to trust it has increased by 3 points.

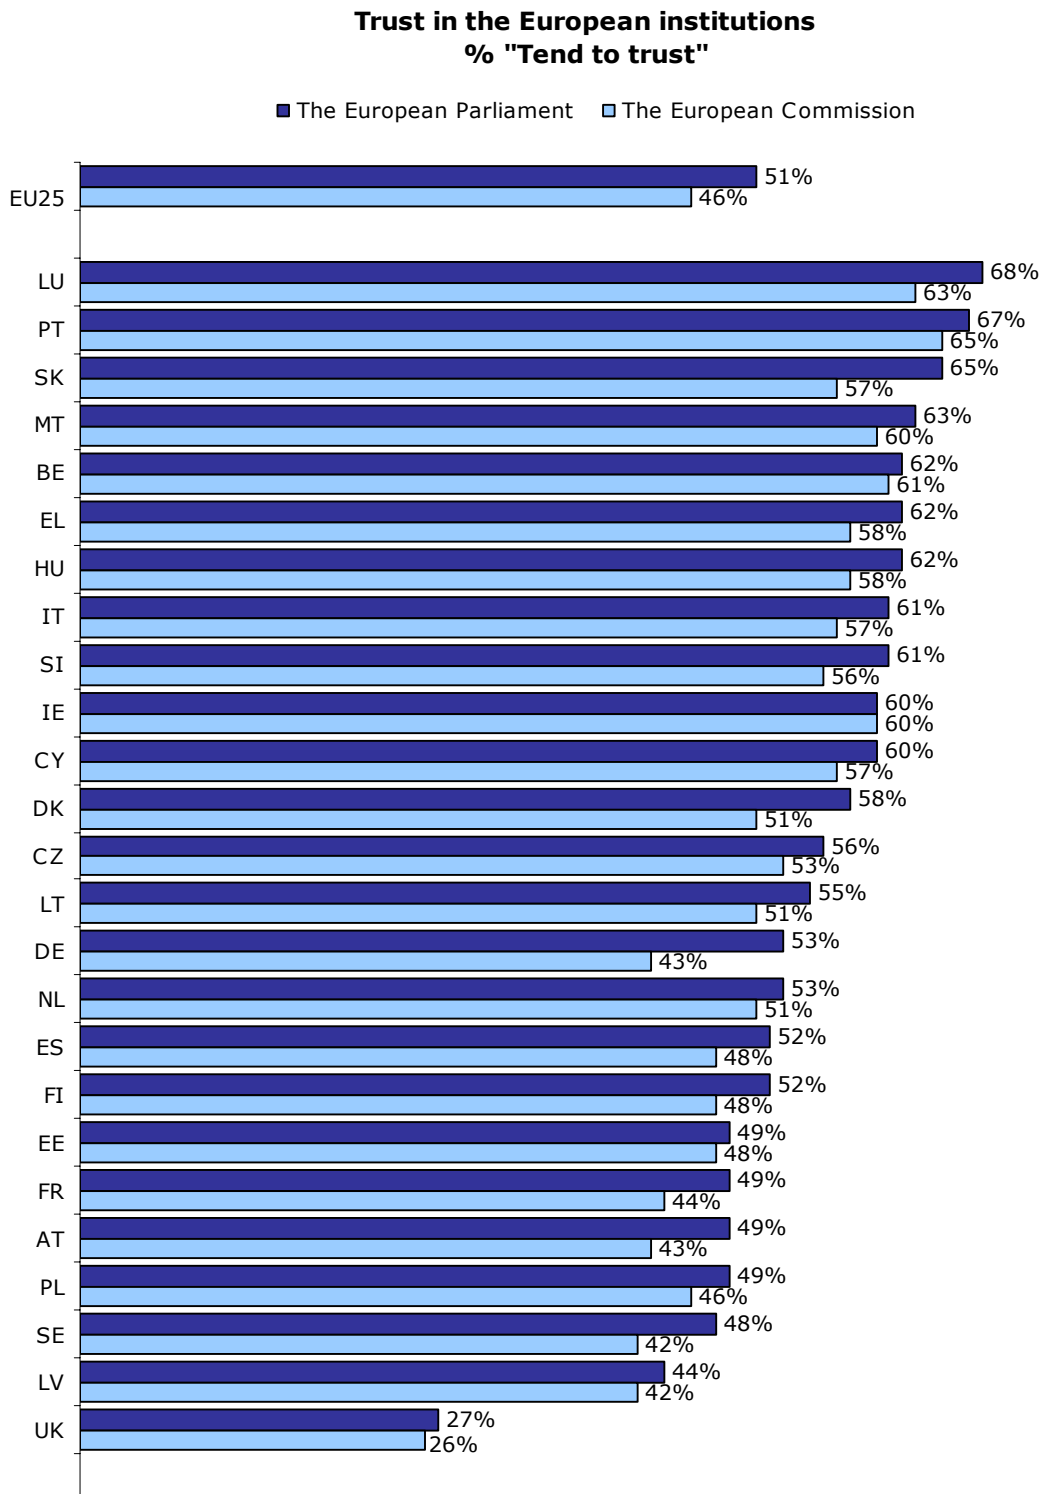

At 34%, levels of distrust in this institution are currently at a record high. Although the difference between positive and negative opinions is still positive, the gap has over the years never been this small and now stands at 17 points (compared with 31 in autumn 2004).

4.2.3. Comparison between both institutions

European citizens still tend to have greater trust in the European Parliament than in the European Commission and, moreover, the confidence curves of the two institutions remain more or less parallel.

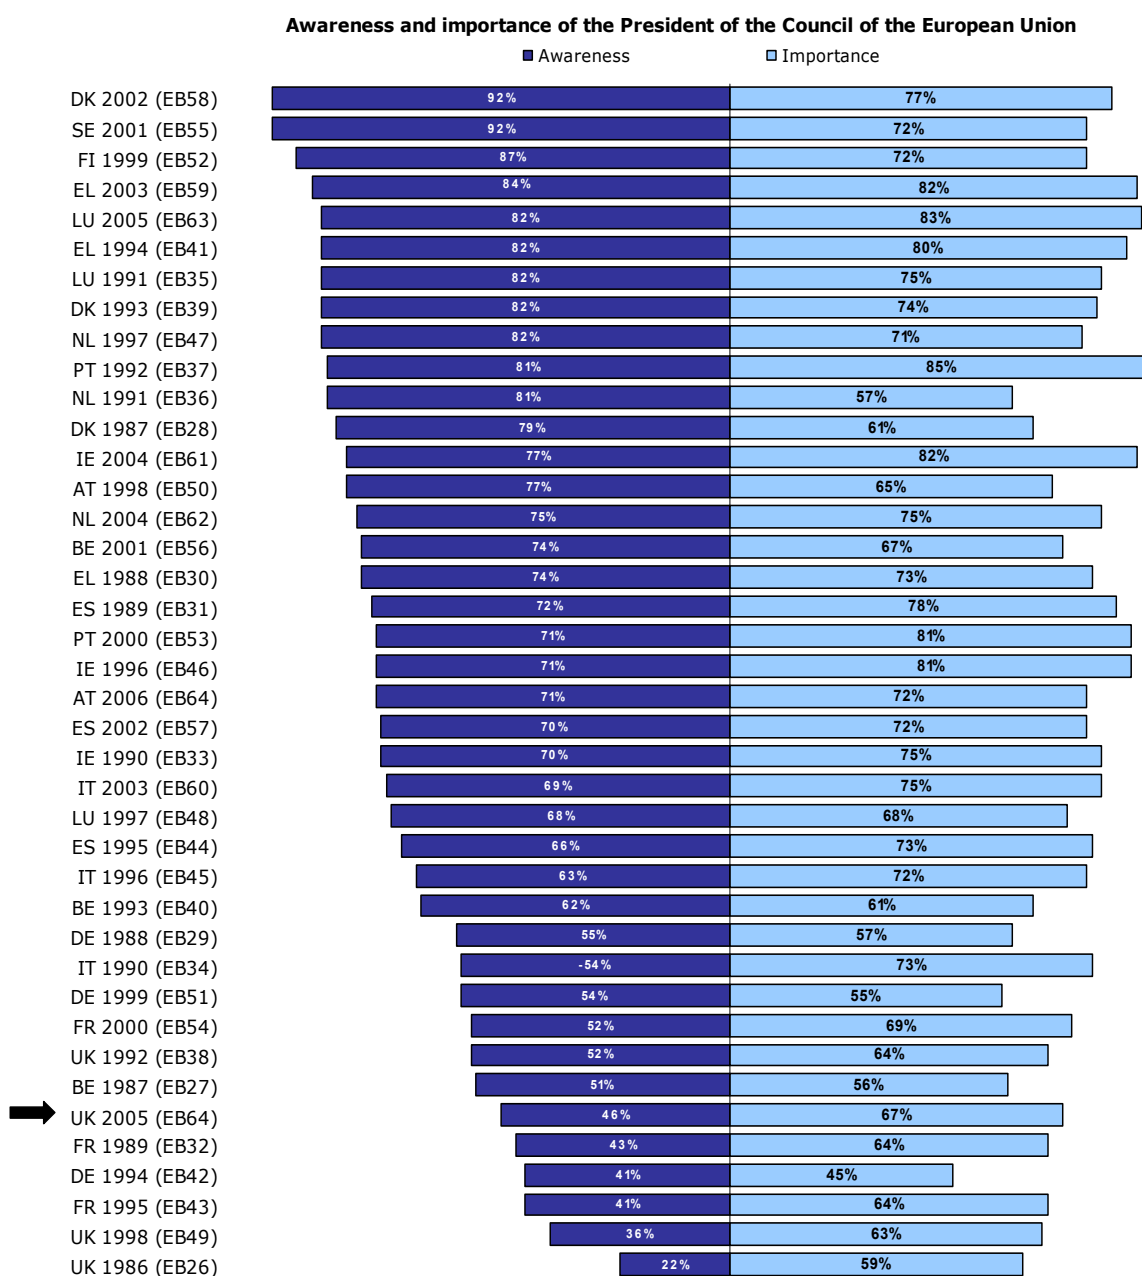

A comparison with the spring 2005 survey reveals no particular pattern. In six countries trust levels improved significantly but in eight countries the opposite is true. The development of a more critical stance among certain traditionally "enthusiastic" countries noted in the previous report has not persisted.

The United Kingdom continues to be the only country in which a majority of respondents tend not to trust either the European Parliament or the European Commission.

4.3. The Presidency of the Council of the European Union

During the second half of 2005, the United Kingdom held the Presidency of the Council of the European Union³⁸ and at the time of the survey, 46% of citizens in the United Kingdom had seen, read or heard something in the media on the subject of their country's Presidency, (up from 36% in the months of the last UK Presidency in 1998). Though awareness levels are relatively low, around two-thirds of UK citizens consider it important that their country presides over the Council of the European Union (67%).

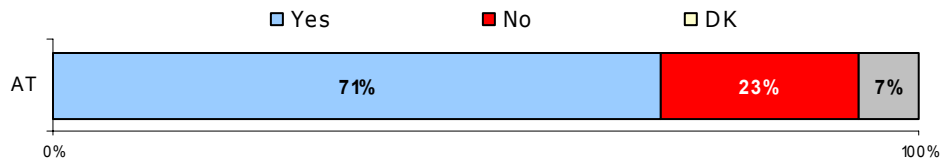

³⁸ QA29a. In the European Union, each Member State, in turn, becomes the President of the Council of the European Union for six months. Right now, it's the turn of the United Kingdom. Have you recently read in the newspapers or heard on the radio or television anything about the United Kingdom's presidency?
QA29b. Whether you have heard about it or not, do you think it is important or not that the UK is President of the Council of the European Union at this time? Would you say it is...?

During the autumn 2005 Eurobarometer, we also asked the question about the reputation and importance of the Presidency of the Council of the European Union in the Member State which was to take over the Presidency from 1 January 2006, namely Austria³⁹.

- There is widespread awareness of the forthcoming Austrian Presidency which is perceived as being important -

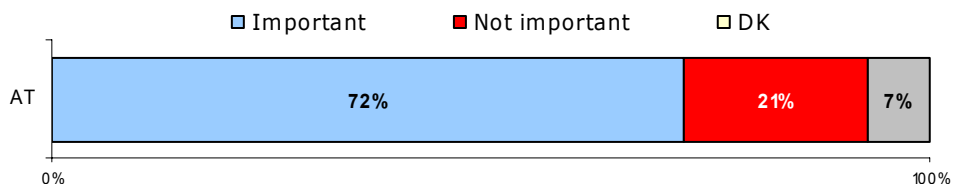

In Austria, just over seven out of ten citizens have already read, heard or seen something in the media about their country's forthcoming Presidency of the Council of the European Union with effect from 1 January 2006 (71%).

Have you recently read in the newspapers or heard on the radio or television anything about Austria's presidency?

In line with the level of awareness, 72% of Austrian respondents consider it important for their country to hold the Presidency of the European Union for six months, while 21% think the opposite and 7% are undecided. As a reminder, 65% of Austrian thought it was important for their country to hold the Presidency in 1998.

Have you recently read in the newspapers or heard on the radio or television anything about Austria's presidency...? QA29d Whether you have heard about it or not, do you think it is important or not that Austria will be President of the Council of the European Union from the 1 January 2006? Would you say it is...?

5. Information in the European Union

Informing citizens is undoubtedly a key factor in building the European Union. Studies show that a lack of information is particularly harmful for a good understanding of how the European Union works and its policies. Information is even more important now that the European Union has been enlarged to twenty-five Member States and other countries are preparing to join it soon. It is therefore essential that every European citizen is informed adequately.

In order to gain a better understanding of the situation regarding the level of information in the European Union, this part of the report deals successively with the following points:

- * The attitude to information in general
- * Subjective knowledge about the European Union
- * Effective knowledge about the European Union
- * Satisfaction with knowledge about the European Union
- * Sources of information about the European Union
- * The European Union in the national media
- * Teaching in schools how the European institutions work
- * Knowledge on how the European Union's budget is spent

5.1. The attitude of Europeans to information in general

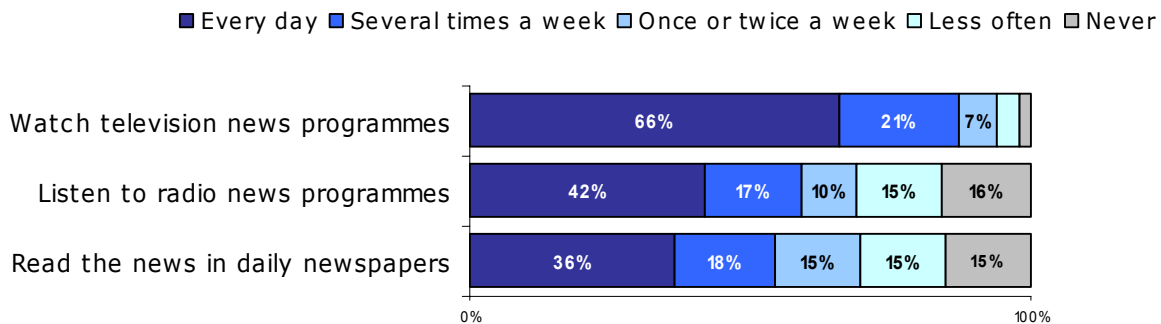

- Television is still the most widely used source of news -

At the level of the European Union, 66% of citizens watch news programmes on television every day and 21% watch them several times a week⁴⁰.

The radio is also widely used by respondents: 42% listen to the news every day on the radio and 17% do so several times a week.

Daily newspapers are read on a daily basis by 36% of European citizens and 18% read the news in a daily paper several times a week.

About how often do you...? - % EU

In general, citizens who follow the news on a daily basis via the television, radio and newspapers are more likely to be men, leaders of opinion and citizens who have a good knowledge of European affairs.

⁴⁰ QA19 About how often do you...?

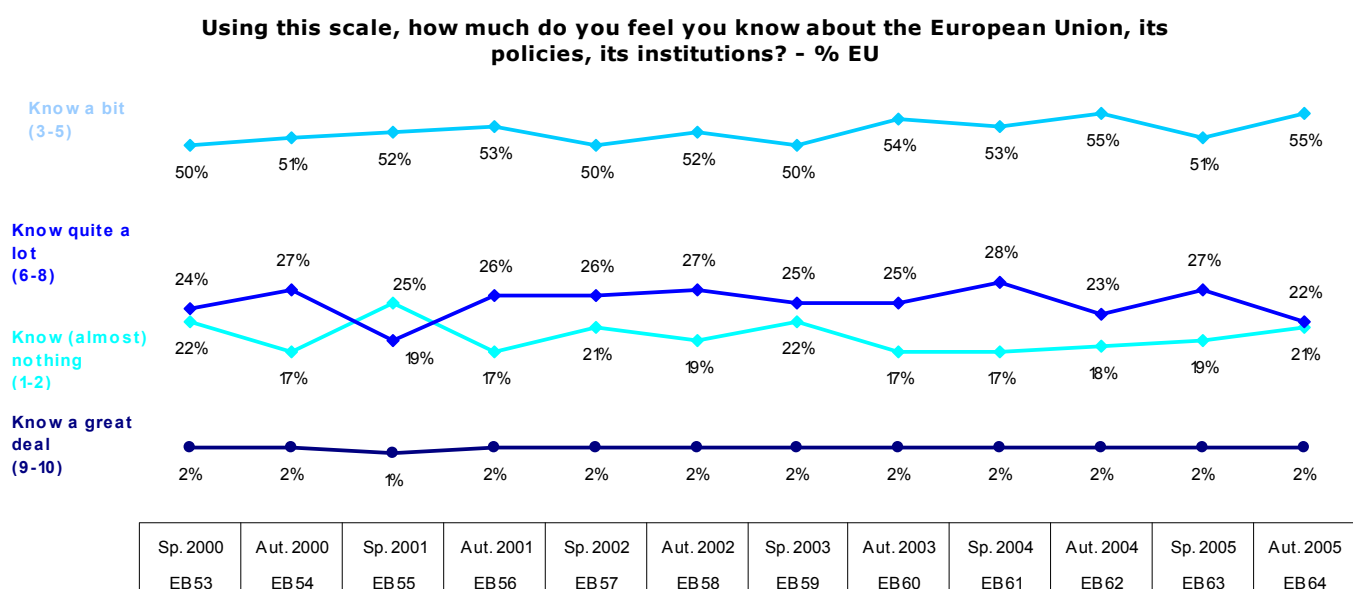

5.2. Subjective knowledge about the European Union

In this part of the report we analyse people's self-perceived knowledge of the European Union, its policies and its institutions. The Eurobarometer includes two measures of subjective knowledge: the well-established knowledge scale and a question that measures more directly whether respondents feel they understand the way the European Union works.

5.2.1. The knowledge scale

- Most European citizens feel they know just a bit about the EU -

For several years, European Union citizens have been asked, in the framework of the Eurobarometer, to assess their level of knowledge about the European Union, its policies and its institutions. To that end, respondents are asked to rate their level of knowledge on a scale of 1 (know nothing at all) to 10 (know a great deal) representing their level of knowledge⁴¹. For ease of reference, the scores have been grouped together.

Looking at the distribution of replies shows that 21% of persons interviewed consider that they know nothing or almost nothing about the European Union (scores 1 and 2), up from 19% in spring 2005.

The majority of respondents (55%) rate their level of knowledge between 3 and 5, therefore considering their knowledge about the European Union to be fairly limited. This score is higher than in spring 2005 (+4 points) but the percentage of people who feel they know quite a lot (scores 6 to 8) has gone down from 27% to 22%.

Only 2% of respondents feel that they know a great deal about the European Union (scores 9 and 10).

⁴¹ QA20. Using this scale, how much do you feel you know about the European Union, its policies, its institutions?

To facilitate the interpretation of the replies to this question, we focus on the average score obtained on the scale from 1 to 10. The average level of subjective knowledge of European Union citizens is 4.2, down from 4.4 in spring 2005.

At a socio-demographic level, the most significant differences are found depending on people's level of education. The other factors where differences are found somewhat interrelate with education. For instance, differences in self-perceived knowledge levels that exist between the various age groups can be largely explained by the fact that levels of education differ between these groups. Leaders of opinion score significantly higher than the average on the knowledge scale but lose, at the same time, 0.5 point since the last survey.

The analysis by country of this question is also based on the average obtained in each country.

In line with the results obtained in autumn 2004 and spring 2005, Dutch and Danish respondents rate their knowledge the highest, though in both countries the average is now lower (4.8, down from 5.3 in the Netherlands and 4.7 down from 5.1 in Denmark). Germany equals the score obtained in the Netherlands (although a decline of 0.1 point compared to spring 2005).

The lowest subjective levels of knowledge in the European Union are found in Hungary (3.5), the United Kingdom (3.7) and Spain (3.7).

As regards the accession and candidate countries, self-perceived knowledge levels remain highest in Bulgaria (4.2; +0.1 point) and lowest in Turkey (3.8; +0.1 point).

How much do you feel you know about the European Union, its policies, its institutions?
Scale from 1 "know nothing at all" to 10 "know a great deal" - Average

5.2.2. Understanding the way the European Union works

Next we analyse the extent to which European citizens feel they understand how the European Union works⁴².

- Subjective understanding in line with subjective knowledge -

Four out of ten respondents feel that they understand the way the European Union works (41%) but the majority feels this is not the case (52%) or by choosing the 'don't know' response (7%) affirm indirectly that they do not understand the way the European Union works. In comparison to the spring 2005 measurements, a slight drop in levels of comprehension is visible.

The results of the socio-demographic analysis are in line with those obtained for the knowledge scale. People who stayed in full-time education until the age of 20 or older are twice as likely to feel they understand the way the European Union works (57%) than are people who left school before the age of 15 (28%).

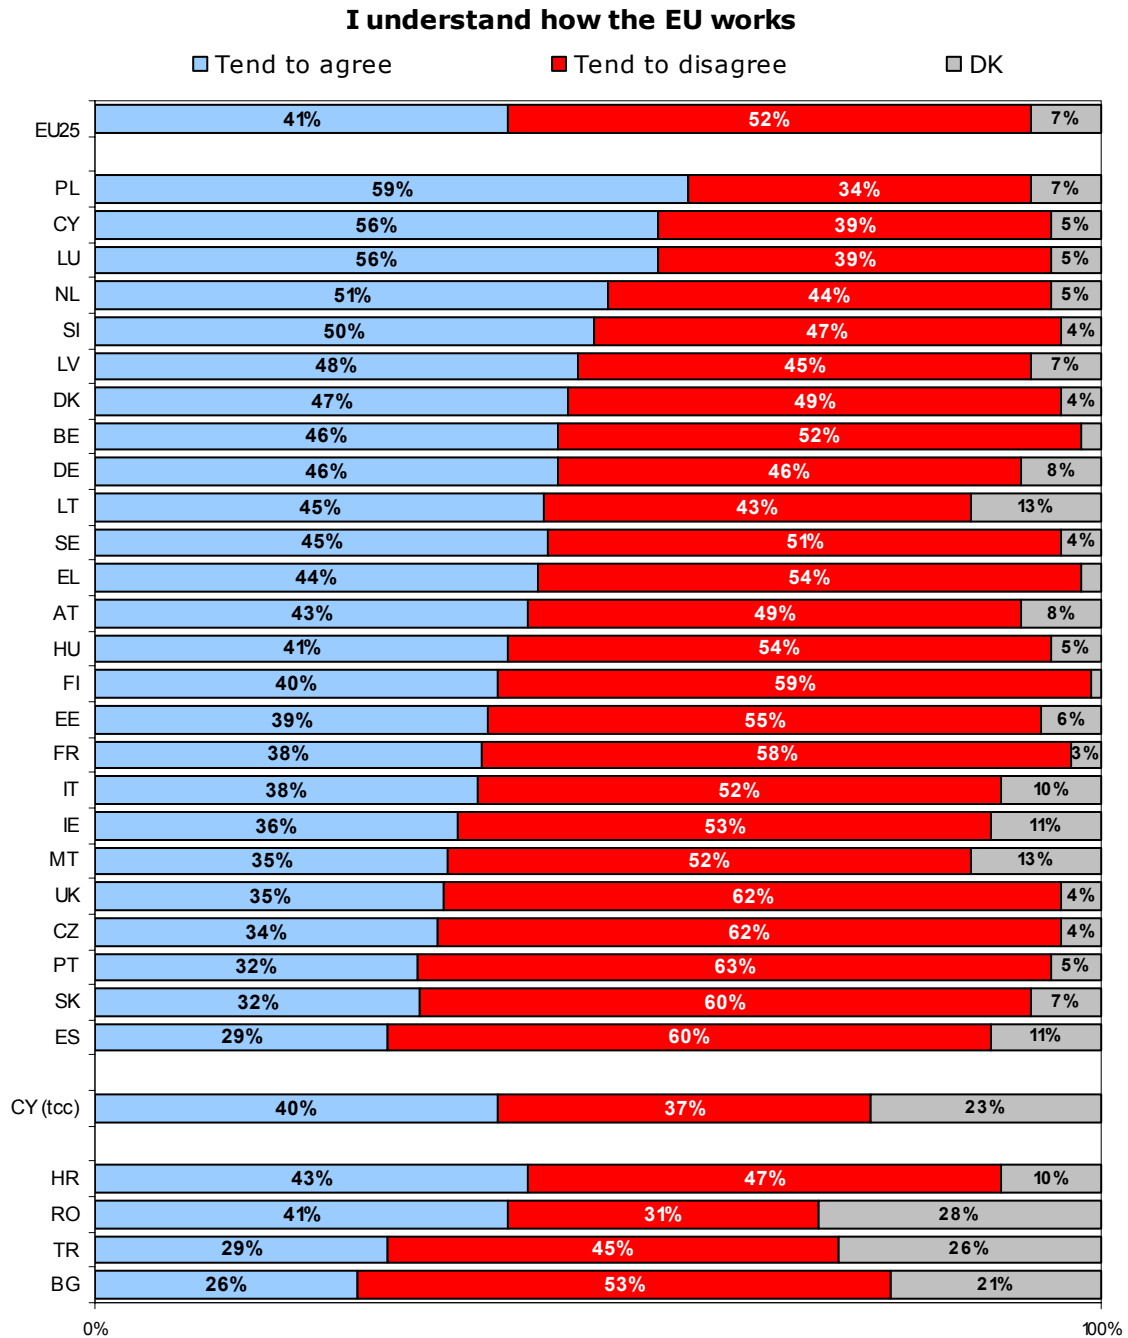

The geographical analysis shows that subjective understanding levels are more widespread in the 10 new Member States than they are in the 15 'old' Member States (49% versus 39%, respectively).

A more detailed analysis of country results in the 10 new Member States indicates that in Poland the feeling that people understand the way the European Union works (59%; +2 points since spring 2005) is most widespread, followed by people in Cyprus (56%; +4 points). The lowest levels of subjective understanding are recorded in Slovakia (32%; +4 points), the Czech Republic (34%; +1 point) and Malta (35%; -6 points).

In the 15 'old' Member States, subjective understanding is most widespread in Luxembourg (56%; +1 point), followed by the Netherlands (51%; +1 point). It is least widespread in Spain (29%; -2 points), Portugal (32%; -3 points) and the United Kingdom (35%; -3 points).

⁴² QA15.2. Please tell me for each statement, whether you tend to agree or tend to disagree.
I understand how the European Union works

Subjective understanding is lower than average especially in Bulgaria (26%) and Turkey (29%) but not in Croatia (43%).

5.3. Effective knowledge about the European Union

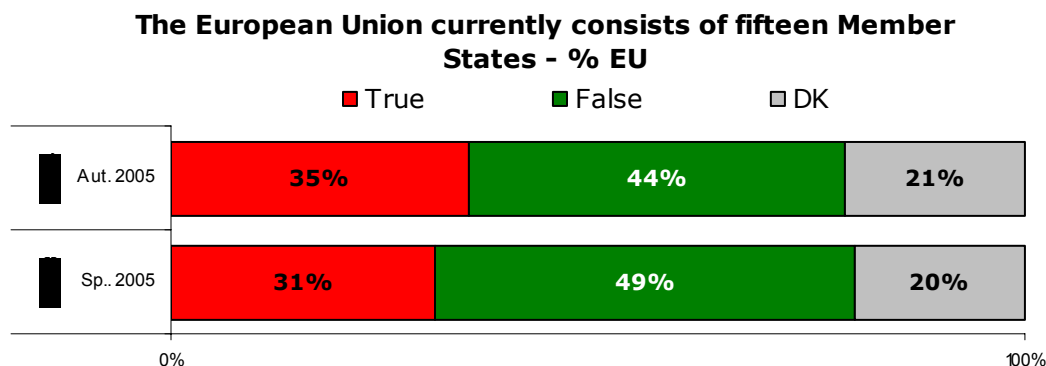

The Eurobarometer also examines people's effective knowledge. Again we have two measures at our disposal. The first measure is a knowledge quiz and the second measure examines respondents' knowledge about the way the European Union budget is spent.

5.3.1. The knowledge quiz

The knowledge quiz consists of four statements about the European Union. Respondents are asked to say whether each statement is true or false⁴³.

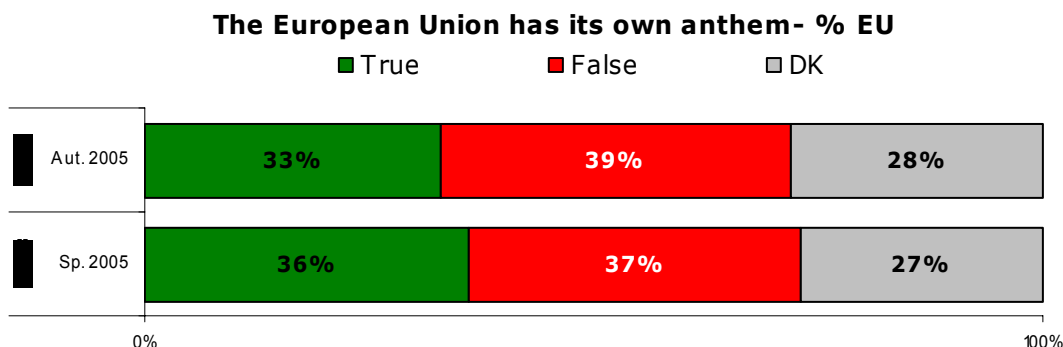

a) The European Union currently consists of fifteen Member States

In response to the statement that the European Union is composed of 15 Member States, 44% of respondents gave the correct answer, i.e. that the statement is false, while 35% gave the wrong answer. Finally, 21% felt unable to express an opinion.

In comparison to the spring 2005 results, when 49% said that the statement was false, fewer respondents now seem to know how many countries make up the European Union.

b) The European Union has its own anthem

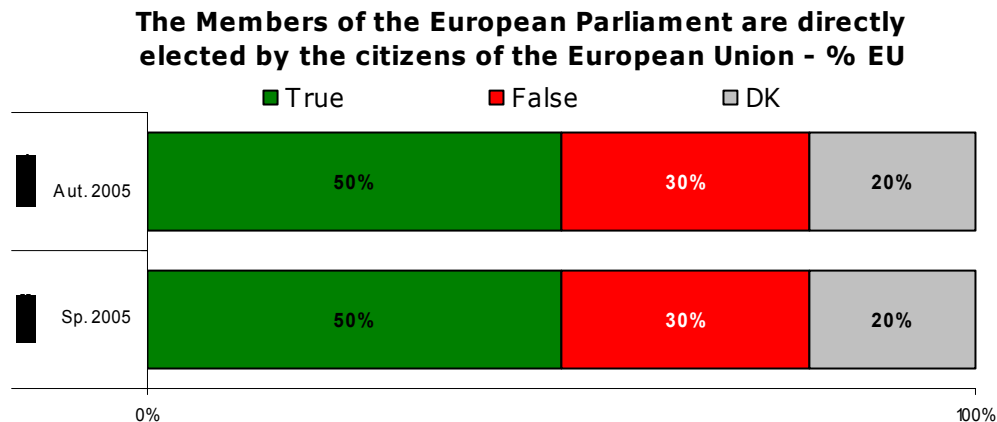

Europeans now seem less aware that the Union has its own anthem (in fact, Ode to Joy by Beethoven). Only 33% gave the correct answer, compared to 36% in spring 2005, while 39% gave the wrong answer (+2 points).

⁴³ QA28. For each of the following statements about the European Union could you please tell me whether you think it is true or false?

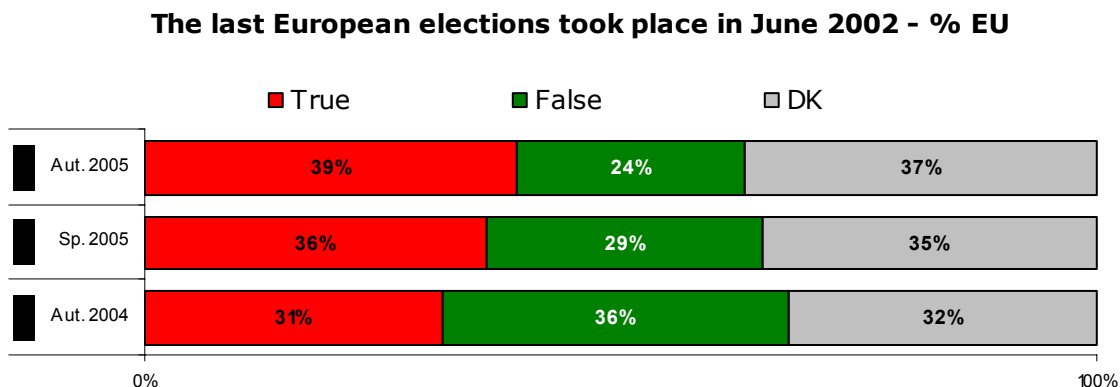

c) Members of the European Parliament are elected directly by European Union citizens

The answers to this question are identical to the answers obtained in spring 2005. One out two respondents knows that MEPs are elected directly by European citizens. At the end of 2004, i.e. a few months after the European elections, 58% of the persons interviewed knew this.

d) The last European elections were held in June 2002

In autumn 2005, less than a quarter of European Union citizens remember that the last European elections were held in June 2004 and not in June 2002, as the statement claims. As time goes by, the awareness of this fact seems to fade away.

5.3.2. Knowledge about the way the European Union's budget is spent

People's perceived use of the European Union's budget is a further measure of effective knowledge⁴⁴.

- Administrative overheads remain over-estimated -

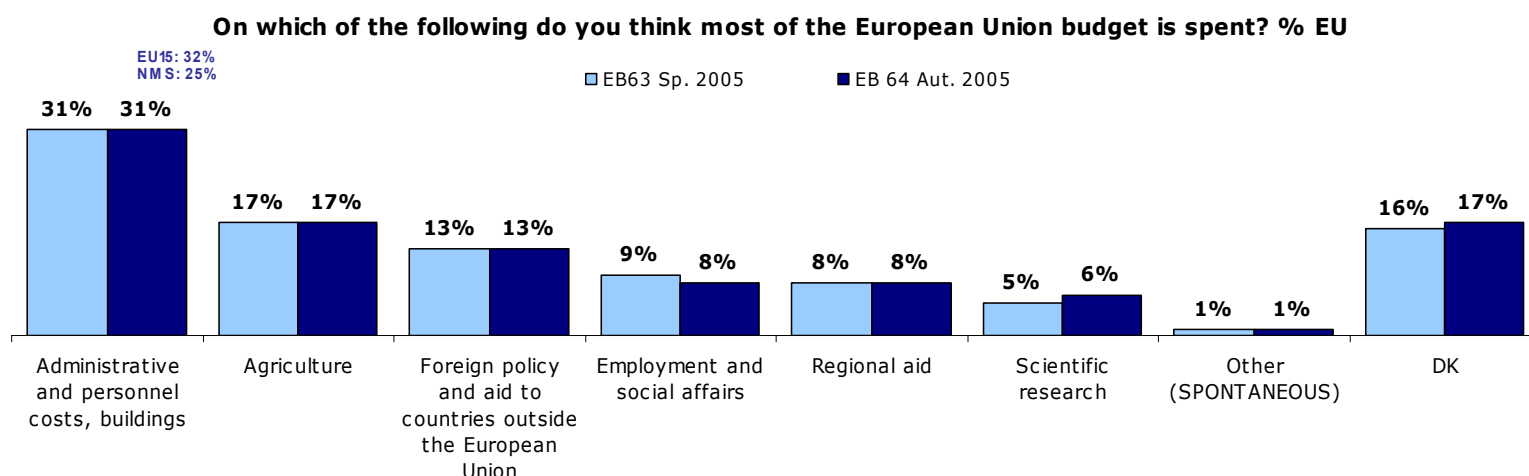

The latest results show that many European citizens continue to lack informed knowledge about the use of the European Union's budget. The autumn 2005 results closely mirror those obtained in the spring. The recent key debate on the European Union's budget, which received widespread media attention, thus seems not to have had an effect on people's knowledge of this sensitive issue.

Almost a third of European citizens (31%) believe that administrative overheads represent the European Union's main budget heading.

Only 17% of the persons interviewed know that agriculture is the most important budget expenditure. Some 13% of respondents believe that the European Union allocates the most important part of its budget to the areas of foreign policy and aids to non-EU countries.

Expenditure related to employment and social affairs and regional aid are each seen by 8% of European citizens as the largest Union expenditures. Some 6% of respondents believe that the lion's share of the European Union's budget is devoted to scientific research.

Finally, it is to be noted that 17% of respondents felt unable to express an opinion on this question, thereby affirming their lack of knowledge on this subject.

⁴⁴ QA37. On which of the following do you think most of the European Union budget is spent?

On the basis of this measurement, effective knowledge also seems to be better in the 10 new Member States than it is in the 15 'old' Member States, at least as regards views about expenditure on agriculture and administrative overheads:

- ◆ Agriculture: only 16% of respondents in the 15 'old' Member States are aware that it is the main budget heading, compared with 23% in the 10 new Member States.
- ◆ 32% of the persons interviewed in the 15 'old' Member States consider that the European budget is allocated above all to the European Union's administrative overheads, compared with 25% in the ten new Member States.

Looking at the national results in more detail shows that:

- ◆ Finland (44%) and Germany (43%) have the highest percentage of citizens who believe that administrative overheads absorb the major part of the European Union's budget, though citizens in Slovenia also tend widely to over-estimate this part of the budget (40%).
- ◆ In Denmark, 45% of citizens are aware that agriculture accounts for the biggest part of European expenditure (the current Commissioner in charge of agriculture and rural affairs is Danish); The Swedes come in second place at 37%, followed by the Poles (30%). People in Bulgaria and Slovakia (both 5%) are the least aware that agriculture is the largest expenditure in the European Union.
- ◆ Finally and logically, a large part of the population in the accession and candidate countries – and especially in Bulgaria (48%) and Turkey (37%) – said they did not to know how the European Union budget is spent. In some of the Member States – in particular Spain (36%), Portugal (30%) and Hungary (29%) – many people were also unable to express an opinion.

5.4. Desire for more information about the European Union

The final issue we analyse in the context of the examination of knowledge levels is the extent to which European Citizens are satisfied with what they know about the European Union or whether they would like to know more about it⁴⁵.

- Widespread desire for more information about the EU -

Close to one out of five European citizens would really like to learn a lot more about the European Union (18%) and a further 48% would like to have some more information about the Union. However, close to a third of the European public is satisfied with what they already know (31%).

In comparison to the results obtained in spring 1998, when this question was last asked, the desire to know a lot more about the European Union is now less widespread (18%, compared to 23% in spring 1998). However, underneath these geographical generalisations, there are significant differences in opinion at the national level.

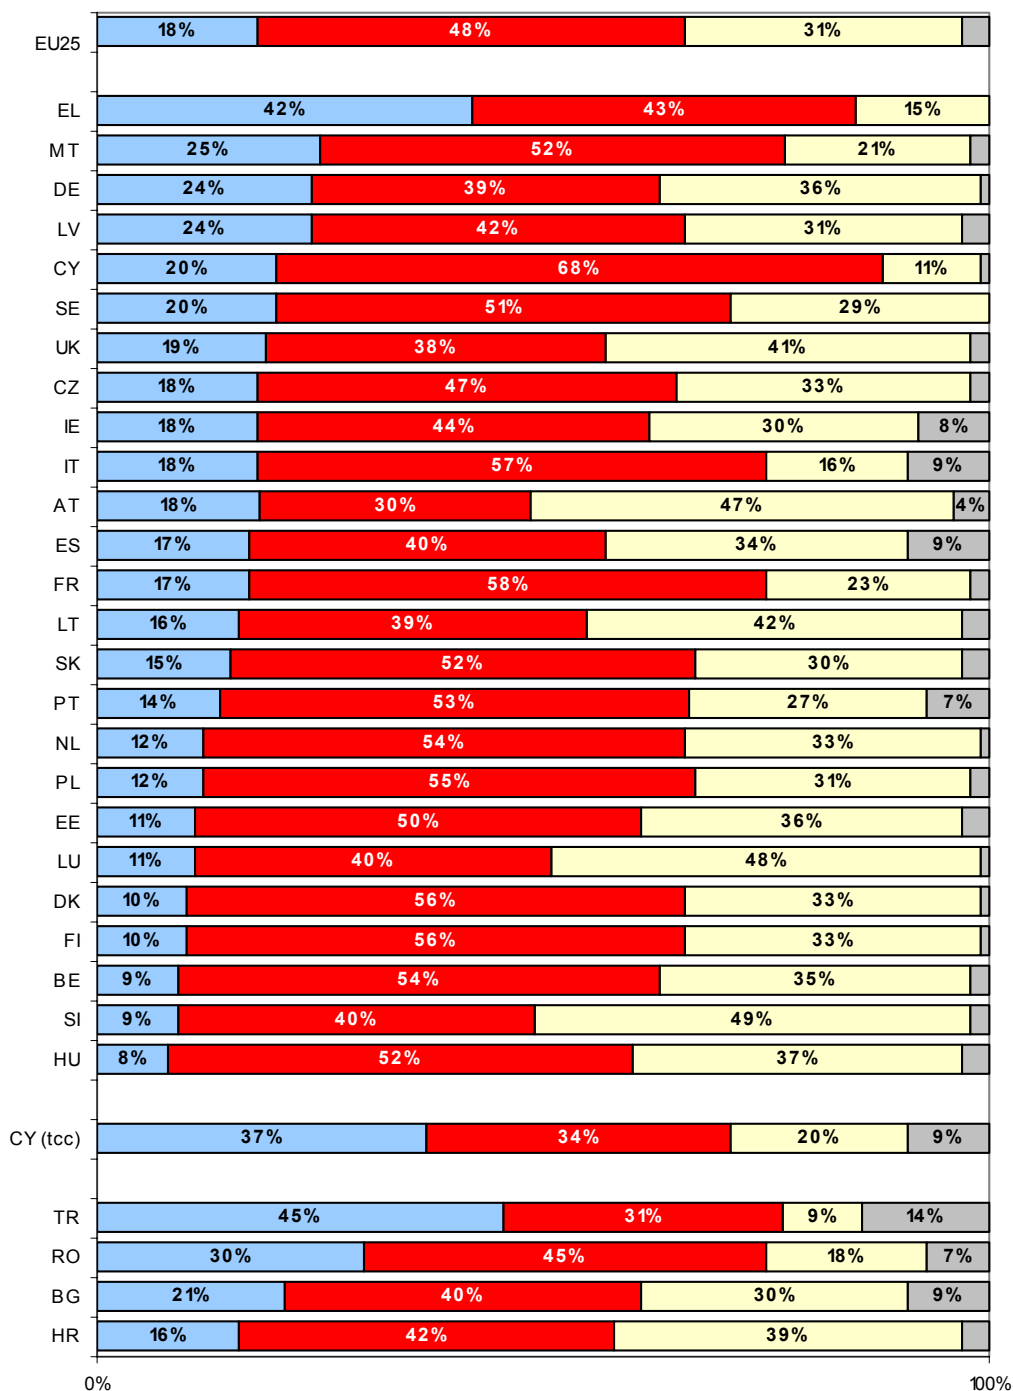

The easiest way to compare national results is to look at the percentage of people in each country that is happy with what they already know. Among the Member States, this varies from as low as 11% in Cyprus to nearly half of the public in Austria (47%), Luxembourg (48%) and Slovenia (49%). In other words, in Cyprus the desire for more information is the most widespread followed by Greece and Italy. In fact, in Greece the desire to know a lot more about the European Union is by far the strongest (42%; +14 points since spring 1998). In all the other Member States, this is the case for less than 30% of the people.

⁴⁵ QA21. Which of the following comes closest to your opinion?

In the accession and candidate countries, the desire for more information is most widespread in Turkey and Romania and least widespread in Croatia.

Which of the following statements comes closest to your opinion?

- ☐ I really need to know a lot more about the EU
- ☐ I would like to have some more information about the EU
- ☐ As far as I am concerned I am happy with what I already know
- ☐ DK

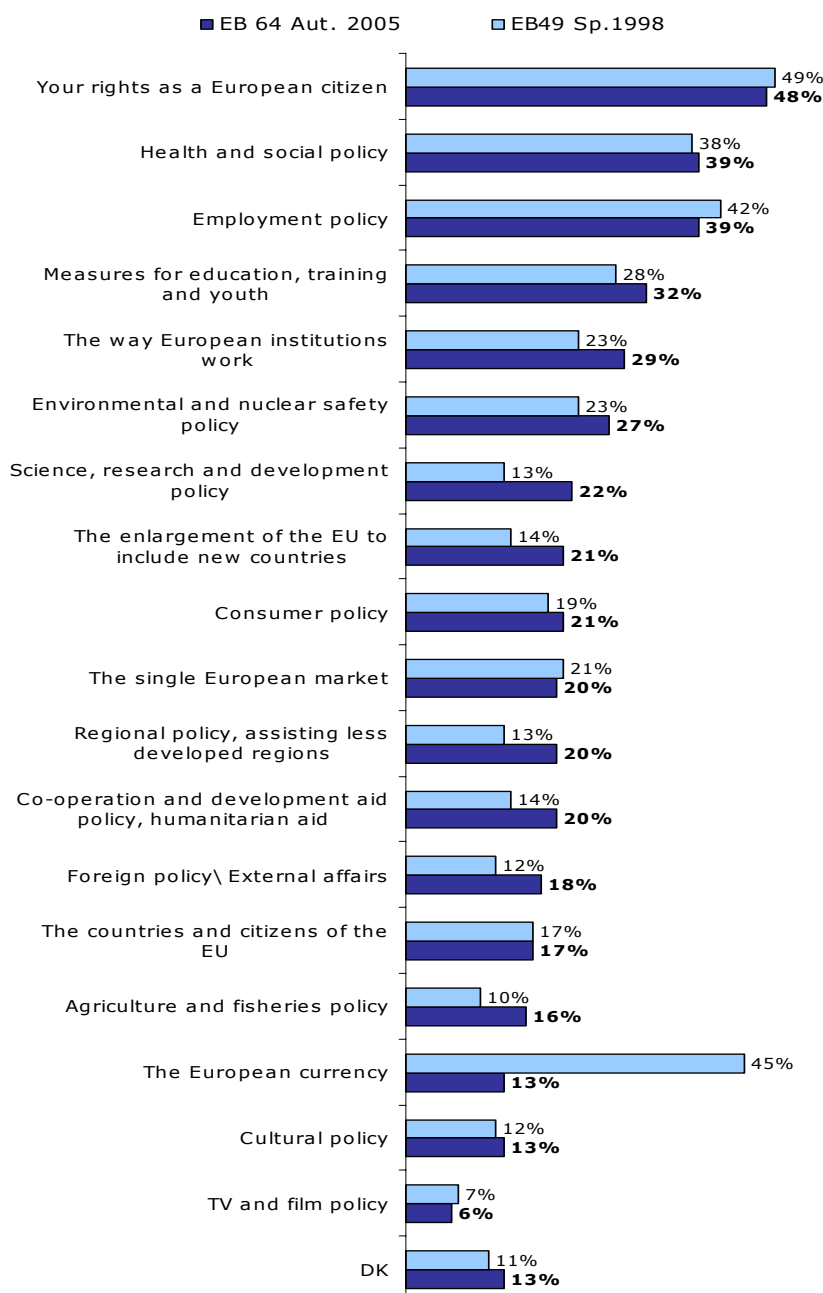

It is interesting to note that the desire for information is directly related to people's self-perceived knowledge and their effective knowledge of the European Union.

The respondents were also asked on which European Union topics or policy areas they would like more information⁴⁶.

The most popular topic is something that concerns people directly, namely their rights as European citizens. About half of the respondents indicated that they would like more information about this (48%). Many people would also like to receive more information about employment policy and health and social policy (both 39%), other issues which affect people directly and which rank high on the list of people's concerns.

On which European Union topics or policy areas would you like more information? % EU

⁴⁶ QA22. On which European Union topics or policy areas would you like more information?

In comparison to the results last obtained in the spring 1998 survey, it is clear that people's information desires have somewhat shifted as some topics have become more or less relevant. Hence, there is now more widespread interest in information about science, research and development policy (22%, +9 points) and enlargement (21%, +7 points).

In comparison to spring 1998, there is now also more widespread interest to receive information about the way the European institutions work within the countries which constituted the EU at that time.

5.5. Sources of information about the European Union

After having examined people's knowledge about the European Union, its policies and institutions, this part of the report focuses on the sources of information used by citizens, as well as their preferred sources of information.

- Television: an indispensable source of information -

The main sources of information European citizens use to obtain information about the European Union are still the same even if the frequency by which they are mentioned is slightly lower⁴⁷. Two-thirds of the public watches television to obtain information about the European Union (66%, -4 points), over four out of ten citizens get their information from daily newspapers (42%, -1 point) and slightly less than a third listen to the radio (30%, -2 points).

Discussions come in fourth place (24%, +1 point), followed by the Internet (stable at 22%) and other newspapers or magazines (19%, +2 points).

⁴⁷ QA23. When you are looking for information about the European Union, its policies, its institutions, which of the following sources do you use? Which else?

5.6. The European Union in national media

When they want to obtain information on the European Union, its policies and its institutions, European citizens have a marked preference for the traditional media (television, daily newspapers and radio). In order to provide an additional insight into this subject, we shall now examine how citizens perceive the media coverage given to the European Union in each of those three media. This chapter will be based on two questions:

- the quantity of information transmitted by television, radio and national press;
- the way in which the three media in question present that information.

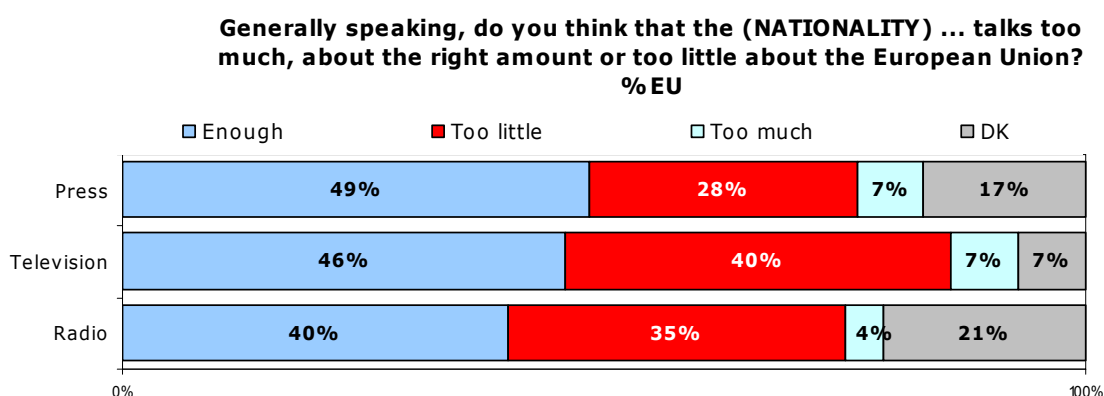

5.6.1. Media coverage of the European Union

- A demand to have more information - especially on television -

In autumn 2005, around half the respondents consider that their national press gives sufficient coverage to the European Union (49%), but more than a quarter of them said that it does not get enough coverage (28%). Only 7% consider that it gets too much coverage⁴⁸. It is to be noted that 17% of the respondents did not express an opinion.

Television is again a different case: although 46% of respondents consider that this media gives sufficient coverage to European affairs, 40% now declare that it does not talk enough about the subject. In other words, two-fifths of European citizens seem to want greater television coverage of European news.

As regards the radio, four out of ten European citizens consider that the coverage of of European affairs is about right on the radio but almost as many feel it does not provide enough information (35%). It is to be noted that a high proportion of respondents (21%) did not express an opinion.

In comparison to spring 2005, the view that the national television, radio and press now talk too little about the European Union has become more widespread. For the television and the radio it increased by 5 percentage points and for the national press an increase of 4 percentage points was recorded.

⁴⁸ QA24. Generally speaking, do you think that the (NATIONALITY)... talks too much, about the right amount or too little about the European Union?

5.6.2. The way in which the media present the European Union

Around half of European citizens consider that television (49%), radio (47%) and press (47%) coverage in their country presents the European Union objectively.⁴⁹

However, around a quarter of those surveyed consider that television in their country is too positive in its approach to European affairs (24%), while the corresponding percentages are 17% for the press and 15% for radio coverage.

Just over one citizen in ten considers that both television and the press treat European affairs too negatively (12%).

Finally, the number of “don’t know” replies to this question is significant: 29% of the persons interviewed did not express an opinion as regards radio coverage, 25% for the press and 15% for television.

Public opinion on the way the national press presents the European Union has remained stable since spring 2005. We only see minor shifts in the proportion of citizens that regard television coverage of the EU as too positively (-2) and the proportion of citizens that hold the view that information about the EU is presented objectively by the national radio (+2).

⁴⁹ QA25. Do you think that the (NATIONALITY)... presents the European Union too positively objectively or too negatively?

III. THE CURRENT ROLE OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

In this section the focus is on the perceived current role of the European Union and on public opinion towards current policy issues. Specifically we analyse the following points:

- ♦ The current role of the EU: People's desired priority actions, the extent to which people support a role for the Union in taking policy decisions and the perceived international role of the European Union.
- ♦ Current policy issues: Support for the common security and defence policy, the common foreign policy and the single currency.

1. The current role of the European Union

In this first chapter the focus is more general as we analyse what are the priority EU actions for European citizens, to what extent they support the involvement of the European Union in relevant policy areas, and how the public thinks about the Union's international role in the world.

1.1. The European Union's priorities

We begin this chapter by examining what the three actions are to which, according to European citizens, the European Union should give priority.⁵⁰

- Fighting poverty, social exclusion and unemployment still the top priorities -

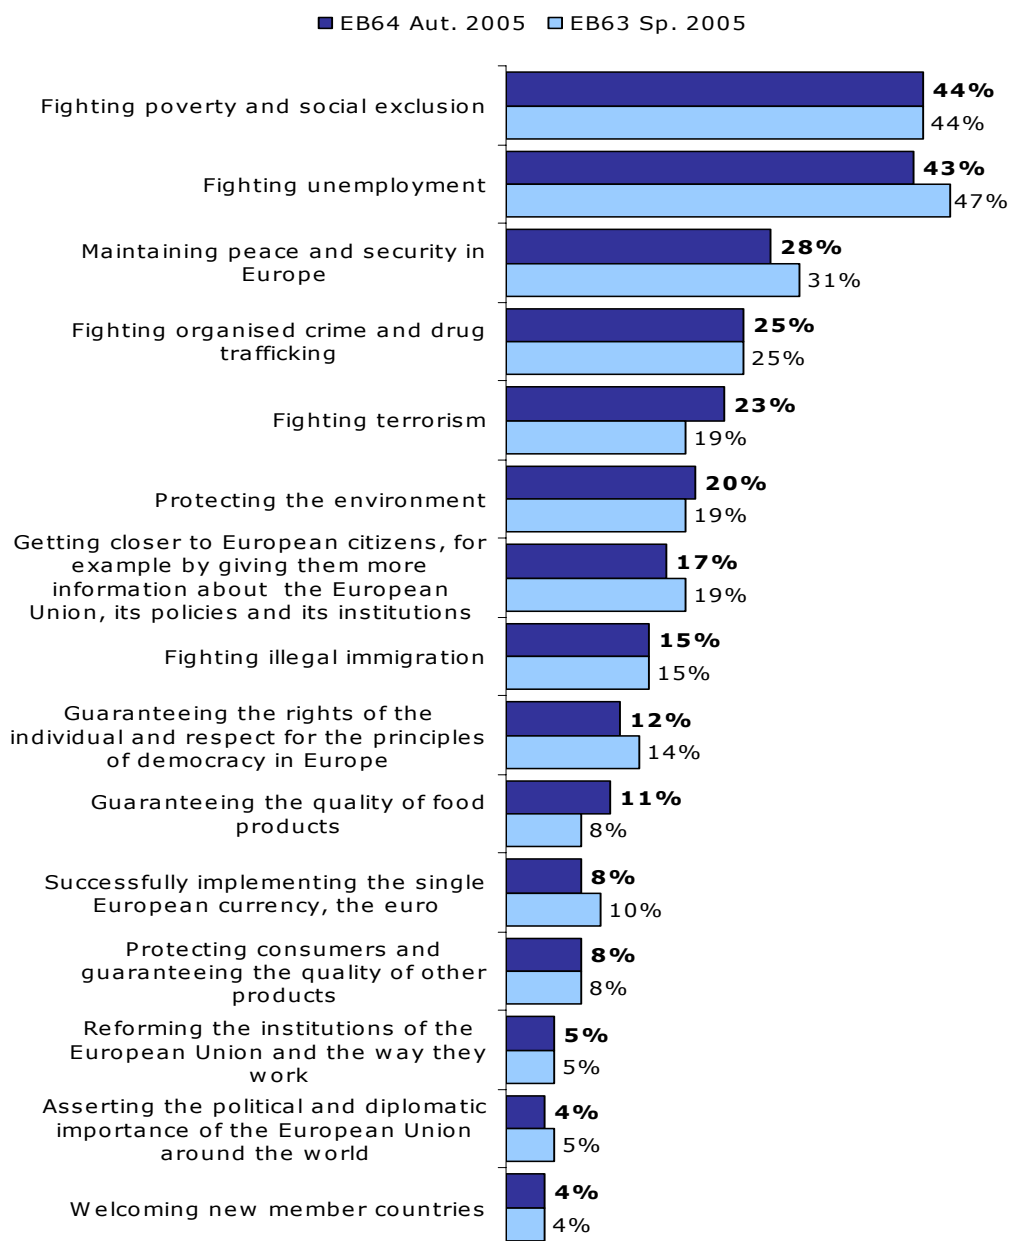

In line with the finding that a large proportion of the European public considers unemployment as the main concern for their country, the results indicate that the fight against poverty and social exclusion and combating unemployment are seen as the top priorities for the European Union. In fact, the fight against poverty and social exclusion now tops the list at 44% (same level as in spring 2005), with unemployment now in second place (43%, -4 points).

Around a quarter of European citizens believe that maintaining peace and security in Europe (28%, -3 points), fighting organised crime and drug trafficking (25%) and fighting terrorism (23%, +4 points) should be priority actions for the European Union.

Citizens are less likely to view the other actions as priorities. Especially the more institutional aspects such as the reform of the European institutions or further enlargement rank low on the list, with only around 5% of respondents mentioning these two actions.

⁵⁰ QA34. From the following list of actions, could you tell me what should be for you, the three actions that the European Union should follow in priority?

The three actions that the European Union should follow in priority - % EU

The average results conceal large variations. We find significant differences between the new Member States and the old Member States with regards to the two top priorities. In the new Member States, 61% and 56% respectively view fighting unemployment and fighting poverty and social exclusion as priorities, compared to 40% and 42% respectively in the old Member States. Another relevant difference is found in terms of getting closer to European citizens where the percentage in the old Member States is significantly higher than it is in the new Member States (19% versus 10%).

1.2. Joint or national decision-making?

This question⁵¹ was originally developed to provide insight into the principle of subsidiarity. In an enlarged Union its value remains. Firstly because it is a further measure of support as it shows to what extent citizens want the European Union to be involved in policy decisions. Secondly because it allows us to differentiate between a large number of policy areas. In autumn 2005, the question has for the first time also been asked in the new Member States and in the accession and candidate countries.

- Most widespread support for the fight against terrorism -

There is widespread consensus among European citizens that decisions with regards to fighting terrorism should be made jointly within the European Union (78%). Many people also believe decisions should be taken jointly when it comes to scientific and technological research (69%), protecting the environment (66%) and defence and foreign affairs (63%). There is widespread opposition to joint decision-making when it comes to pensions and taxation.

Support for joint-decision making	EU25	EU15	NMS	AC/CC
Fighting terrorism	78%	75%	88%	58%
Scientific and technological research	69%	67%	78%	58%

Pensions	22%	21%	30%	39%

⁵¹ QA31. For each of the following areas, do you think that decisions should be made by the (NATIONALITY) government or made jointly within the European Union?

It is interesting to find that on average only 39% of European citizens favour joint-decision making when it comes to fighting unemployment when this is seen as one of the Union's top priority. However, public opinion varies considerably from country to country. In Finland only 22% of people want decisions to be taken jointly within the European Union while close to 6 out of 10 people hold this view in Greece and Cyprus (both 57%).

As the table above shows, support for joint decision-making is broader in the new Member States than it is in the old Member States. The only exception concerns energy policy for which support is somewhat more widespread in the 15 old Member States than in the 10 new Member States (59% vs. 55%). There are no significant differences between the two groups of countries when it comes to competition policy.

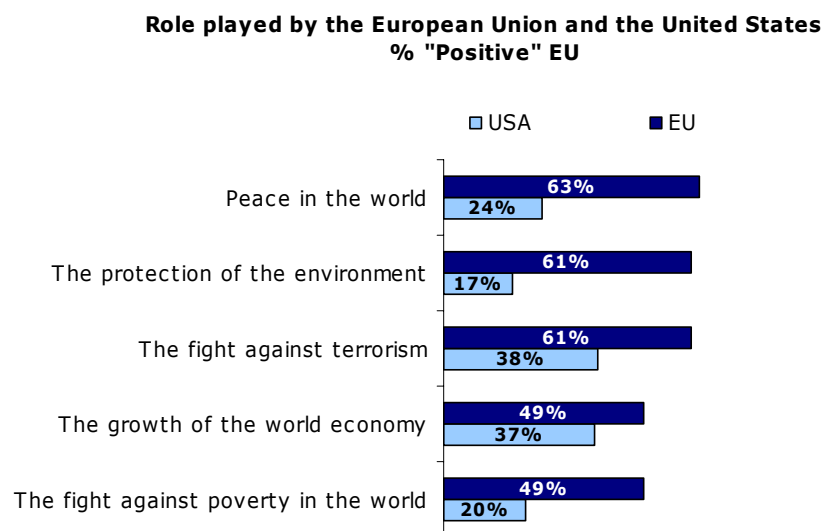

1.3. International role of the European Union

We end this chapter with an analysis of the international role of the European Union and compare this to the role played by the United States.

- An increasingly positive view of the role played by the European Union -

The perception of the international role played by the European Union remains positive, certainly in comparison to the role the United States is perceived to play⁵². The difference between the assessment of the persons interviewed with regard to the European Union's action and that of the United States remains large.

A comparison of the percentage of citizens who assess positively the role played by the European Union in the area of protection of the environment and the percentage approving the action of the United States in this area, shows a difference of 44 points in favour of the EU. That difference is 39 points in the case of peace in the world. On the other hand, the divergence of opinions is smaller as regards the positive role played by the two entities to boost world economic growth (12 points).

⁵² QA38a. In your opinion, would you say that the United States tend to play a positive role, a negative role or neither a positive nor a negative role regarding...?

QA38b. And in your opinion, does the European Union tend to play a positive role, a negative role or neither a positive nor a negative role regarding...?

More than six out of ten respondents perceive positively the role played by the European Union with regards to peace in the world (63%), the protection of the environment (61%) and the fight against terrorism (61%). The role of the United States in these three areas, on the other hand, is strongly criticised by European citizens and the majority of respondents consider that American actions here are negative (53%, 60% and 40%, respectively).

The survey also shows that close to half of the respondents believe that the European Union's contribution to world economic growth is positive (49%), while only 37% see the role played by the United States in that light as positive and 33% even declare that the American action in this area is negative.

The role played by the European Union in combating poverty is also viewed positively by close to half of European citizens (49%). Conversely, just over half of the respondents view the American action in the fight against poverty in the world as negative (51%).

One can conclude, therefore, that in general, the role played by the European Union in these five areas it is perceived positively by European citizens, whereas the role of the United States is seen far more negatively.

	European Union			United States
	% positive	% negative	% Neither.. nor..	% positive	% negative	% Neither.. nor..

The fight against poverty in the world	49%	16%	28%	20%	51%	22%

2. Support for current policy issues

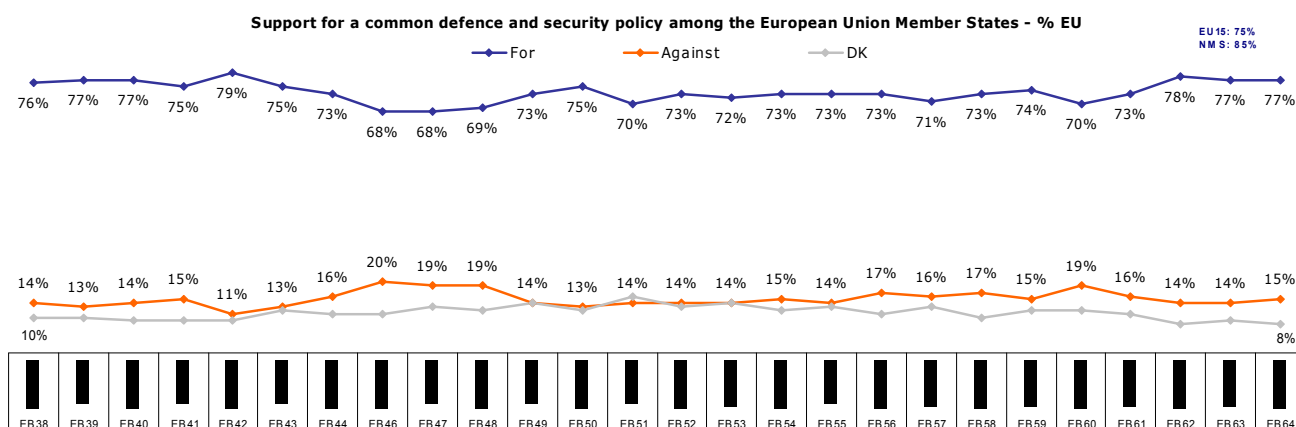

In this chapter, we examine levels of support for a number of current policy issues, namely the common security and defence policy, the common foreign policy and the single currency.

2.1. The common security and defence policy

2.1.1. Support for the ESDP

- Stable support for ESDP -

European public opinion is still very receptive to issues relating to the European Security and Defence Policy (ESDP). At 77%, support for a common security and defence policy remains at the same high level obtained in spring 2005⁵³.

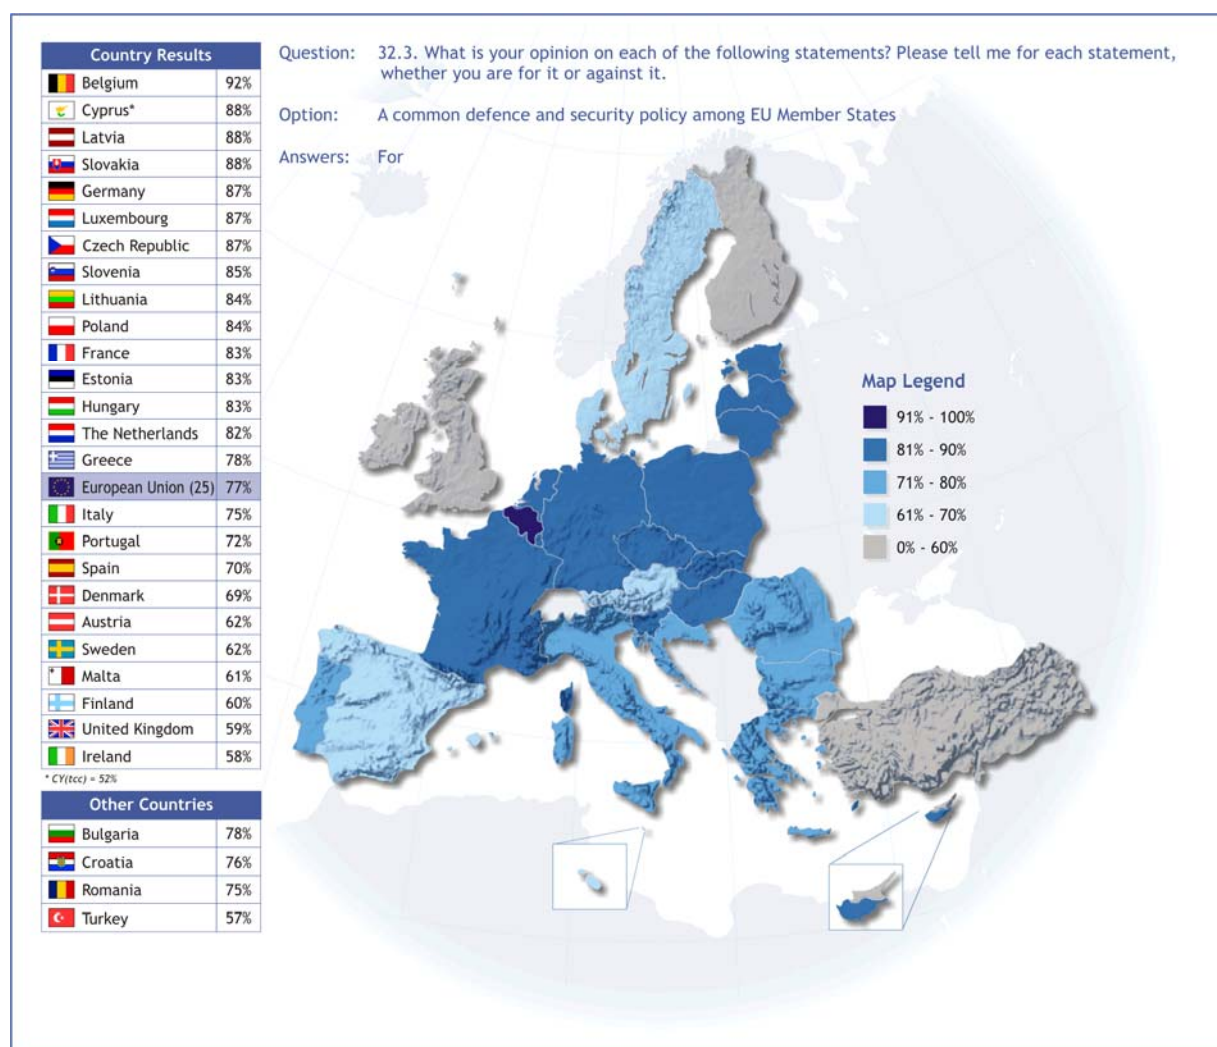

The intensity of this support is even stronger in the ten new Member States: there is a difference of 10 points between the average obtained in the fifteen old Member States and that recorded in the ten new Member States (75% and 85% respectively).

Analyses of the national results show that support for a common defence and security policy is most widespread in Belgium (92%, +2 points), Cyprus (88%, -6 points), Latvia and Slovakia (both 88%, both +3 points). With around a third of respondents against the idea, opposition is most widespread in Finland (36%) and Sweden (33%). However, even in these two countries and despite their tradition of neutrality, opposition is clearly the minority view.

⁵³ QA32.3. What is your opinion on each of the following statements? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.

A common defence and security policy among European Union Member States

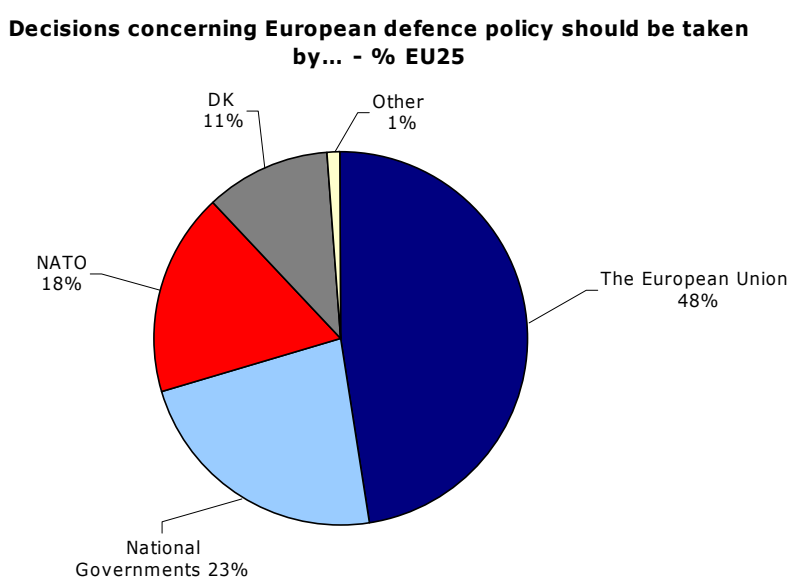

2.1.2. Who should take decisions about European defence?

Decisions that concern matters related to European defence are taken at various levels. The Eurobarometer has measured which of the three actors – national governments, NATO, EU – should take decisions according to the European public⁵⁴.

- Majority view is that defence matter should be decided by the EU -

According to nearly half of the European citizens, decisions concerning European defence policy should be taken by the European Union (48%). Just less than a quarter believes that national governments should take these decisions (23%), whereas the view that NATO should take these decisions is held by 18% of European citizens.

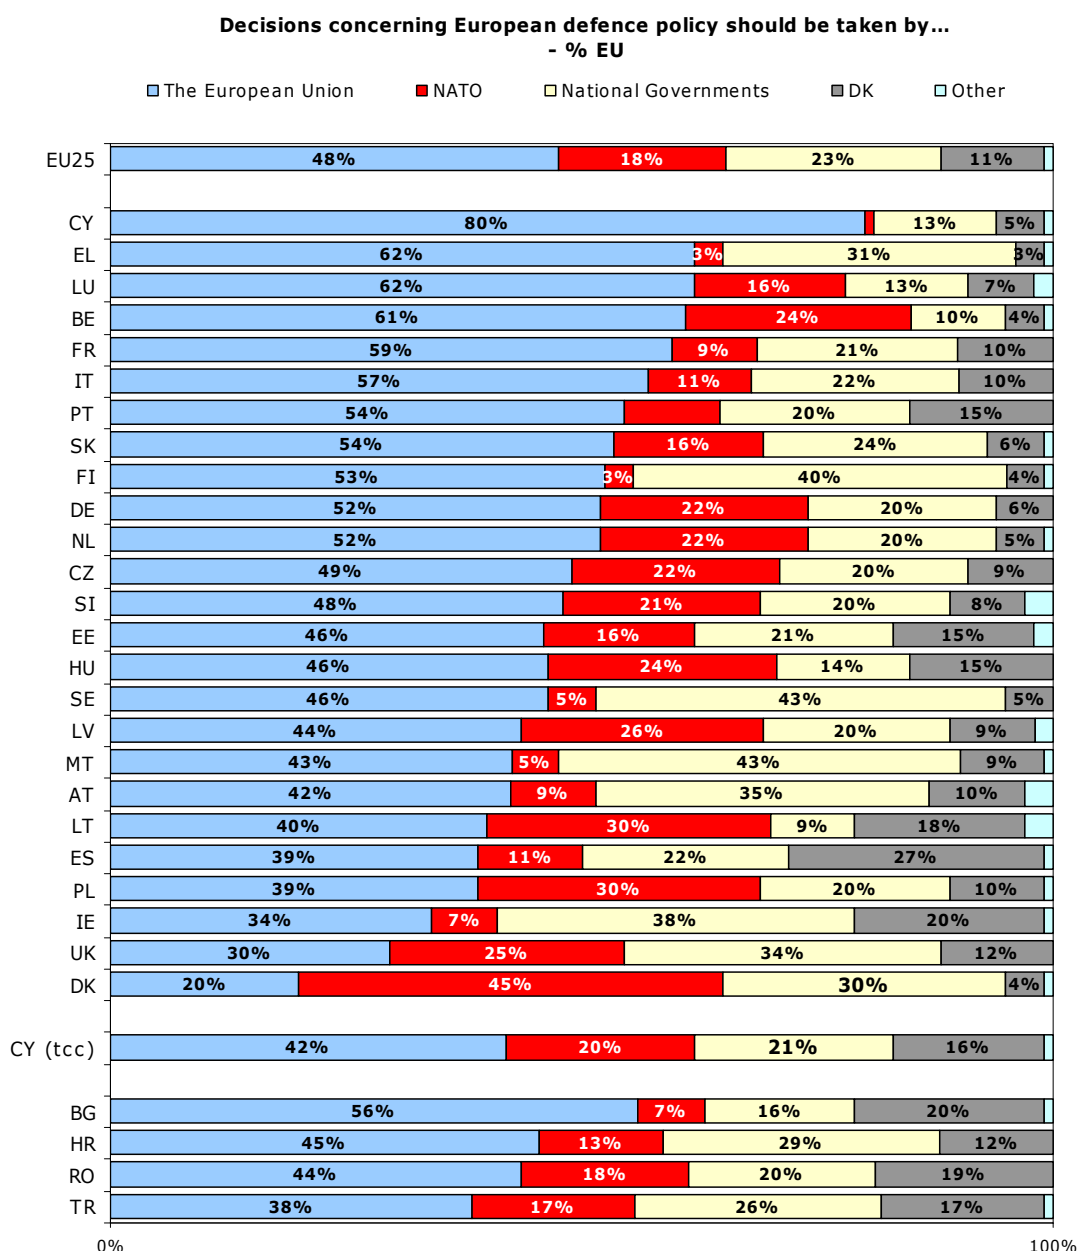

Clearly public opinion varies from country to country. Looking first at the geo-political divisions within the European Union indicates the following:

- ♦ The view that decisions should be taken by the European Union is broadest in the 12 Euro Zone countries (53%). It receives least support in the four accession and candidate countries (42%).
- ♦ In the new Member States, support for NATO is most widespread: 26% of respondents in these ten nations believe NATO should take decisions about European defence policy, compared to 16% of respondents living in the 15 'old' Member States.
- ♦ The view that decisions should be taken at the national level is slightly more popular in the 'old' Member States and the accession and candidate countries (both 24%) than it is in the new Member States (19%).

⁵⁴ QA35. In your opinion, should decisions concerning European defence policy be taken by national governments, by NATO or by the European Union?

Furthermore, analysis of the national results show the following:

- ♦ Denmark is the only country where the majority view is that decisions concerning European defence policy should be taken by NATO (45%). In other countries this view is shared by a far smaller proportion of the population (with Lithuania and Poland in second place at 30%).
- ♦ In Ireland (38%) and the United Kingdom (34%), the majority view is that decisions concerning European defence policy should be taken at the national level. Nonetheless, this view is more widespread in Malta, Sweden and Finland. In Malta, public opinion is divided between decision making at the national level or the European Union (both 43%).
- ♦ Finally, in all other countries the most popular opinion is that decisions concerning European defence policy should be taken by the European Union. Support for this view is most widespread in Cyprus (80%), followed by Luxembourg (62%), Greece (62%) and Belgium (61%).

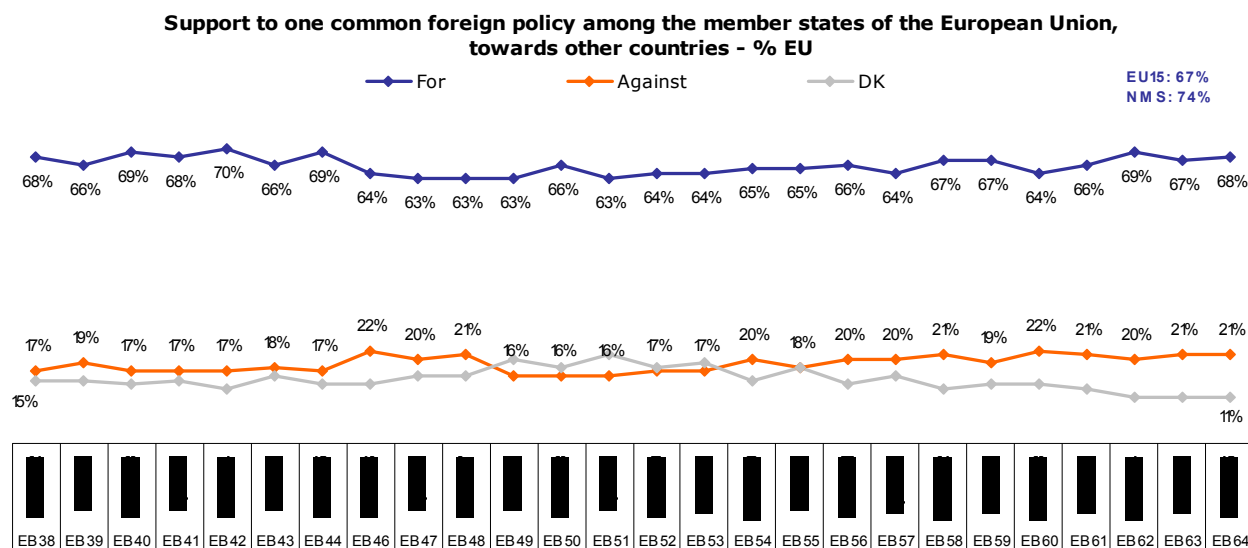

2.2. Support for a common foreign policy

Next we examine support levels for a common foreign policy.

- No change in support for a common foreign policy -

Support for a common foreign policy also remains stable since the last survey⁵⁵: more than two out of three European citizens continue to support this idea (68%).

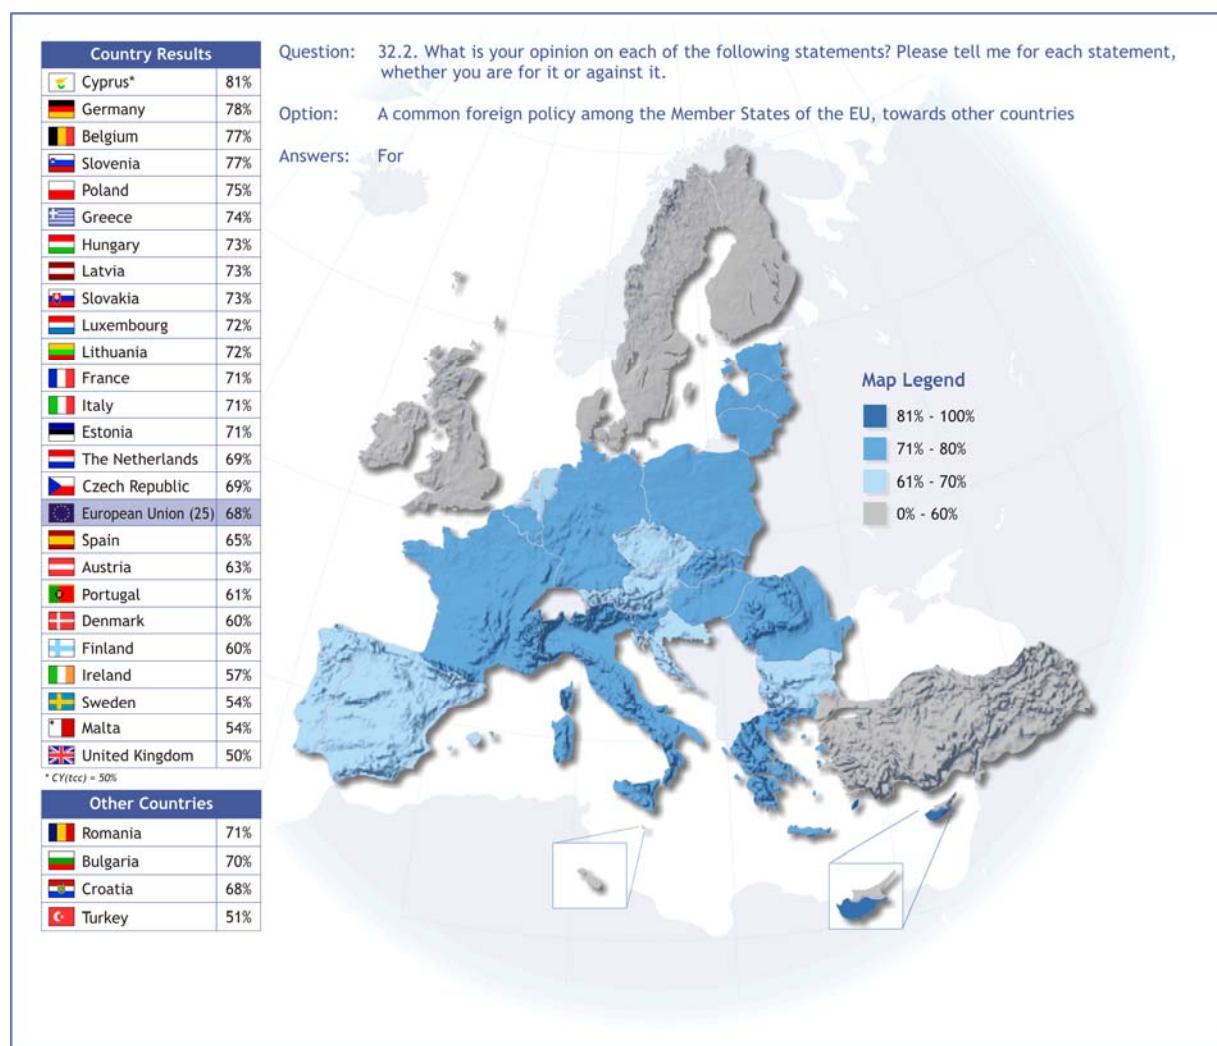

As with support for the ESDP, the intensity of support for a common foreign policy is stronger in the ten new Member States, albeit if somewhat less pronounced: there is a difference of 7 points between the average obtained in the fifteen old Member States and that recorded in the ten new Member States (67% and 74% respectively).

Unlike the previous survey, when Sweden stood out as being the only country where more people were against the idea than for it (47% and 46% respectively), this time the majority view in all nations is in favour of a common foreign policy. Support ranges from 50% in the United Kingdom to 81% in Cyprus.

⁵⁵ QA32.2. What is your opinion on each of the following statements? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.

One common foreign policy among the Member States of the European Union, towards other countries

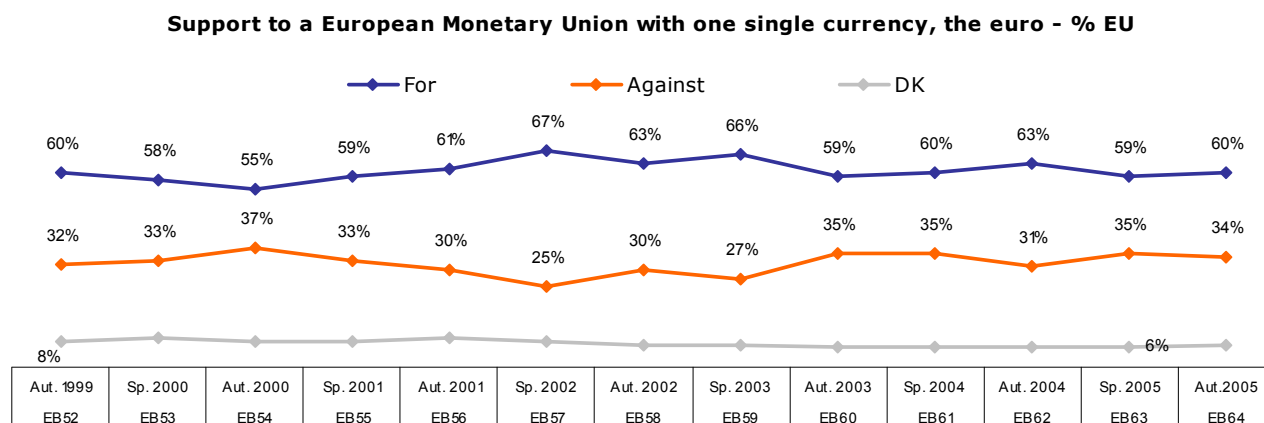

2.3. Support for the single currency

Finally, we examine support levels for the single currency.

- Widespread support for single currency -

Nearly four years after the euro was introduced in twelve European Union Member States⁵⁶, 60% of the persons interviewed declared that they are in favour of European monetary union with a single currency: the euro⁵⁷. This percentage is more or less on a par with the results obtained in the spring 2005 survey.

From a socio-demographic point of view, the main supporters of the euro are:

- ◆ Citizens with the highest level of education (72%)
- ◆ Students (69%)
- ◆ Managers (69%)
- ◆ Citizens who feel most well-informed about the European Union (69%)
- ◆ 'Leaders of opinion' (67%)
- ◆ Citizens who place themselves on the left of the political spectrum (67%)
- ◆ Young people (64%)
- ◆ Men (64%)

⁵⁶ Interested readers may also wish to consult other Flash Eurobarometer studies devoted to the euro on: http://europa.eu.int/comm/public_opinion/euro_en.htm

⁵⁷ QA32.1. What is your opinion on each of the following statements? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.

A European Monetary Union with one single currency, the euro

Support for the single currency is significantly more widespread in the 12 euro zone countries than it is in countries that have not (yet) introduced the euro. The average support level in the euro zone is 68% but this varies from 46% in Greece to 89% in Luxembourg. Furthermore, in most euro zone countries support has increased or remained stable since the spring 2005 survey. The exceptions are Greece (-4 points) and Italy (-3 points).

Opposition to the euro remains most widespread in the three European countries from the fifteen old Member States which are not part of the euro zone: 45% of the persons interviewed in Denmark, 53% in Sweden and as many as 64% in the United Kingdom are against the single currency.

In the new Member States, support for the euro currently stands at 55% and has in most countries weakened. This is particularly the case in Slovakia, where support fell from 72% to 60% but also true for Cyprus (46%, -7 points), Lithuania (54%, -6 points), Estonia (53%, -6 points) and Poland (50%, -6 points).

Question: A32.1. What is your opinion on each of the following statements? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.

Option: A European Monetary Union with one single currency, the euro

IV. THE FUTURE ROLE OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

In this section the focus is on the future role of the European Union. In particular, we analyse the following points:

- ♦ The speed of building Europe: Progression towards a European political union, the European Union's financial resources, the perceived and desired speed of building Europe, the perception of a two-speed Europe and the fears felt by citizens about the building of Europe.
- ♦ The Constitution and its future: Support for the idea of a European Constitution, the function of the Constitution, and the future of the Constitution.
- ♦ Further enlargement: Support for future enlargement, which countries should join and the question of Turkey.

1. The speed of building Europe

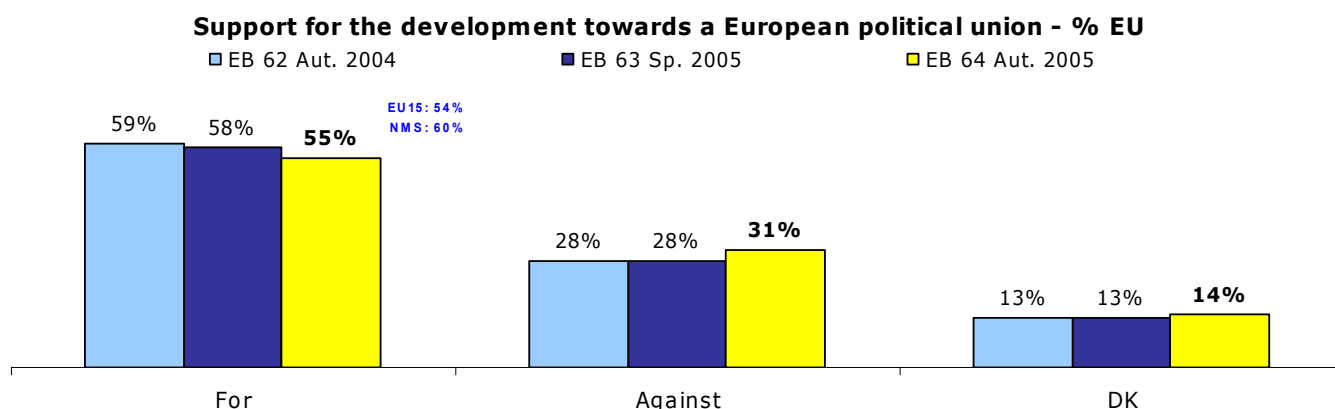

In this first chapter, we examine attitudes of European citizens regarding the speed of building Europe. These results are particularly interesting at a time when the European Union has called for a period of reflection and debate, following the 'no' vote in the referenda on the European Constitution held in France and the Netherlands at the end of the spring of 2005.

1.1. The evolution towards a European political union

- Fall in support for the development towards a European political union -

Though the majority of European citizens (55%) is still in favour of the development towards a European political union, support has fallen since last spring (-3 points)⁵⁸.

In the ten new Member States support has fallen by 7 points to 60% and remains higher than in the 15 old Member States, where the current level of support is 54% (-3 points).

⁵⁸ QA12. Are you, yourself, for or against the development towards a European political union?

Support for a European political union varies depending on certain socio-demographic factors. The most important ones are:

- ♦ Education: 65% of respondents who stayed in school until the age of 20 or older support the concept compared to 47% of those who left full-time education before they reached age 16.
- ♦ Age: 61% of young people aged between 15 and 24 support the concept compared to 51% of those aged 55 and over.
- ♦ Occupation: 63% of self-employed people favour a European political union compared to 51% of manual workers and 50% of unemployed people.
- ♦ Opinion leadership: 65% of those who score highest on the index support the concept while only 46% of those who score lowest on the scale agree.
- ♦ Self-perceived knowledge: 66% of people who feel they know a great deal about the European Union support the concept compared to 44% of people who feel they know very little about it.

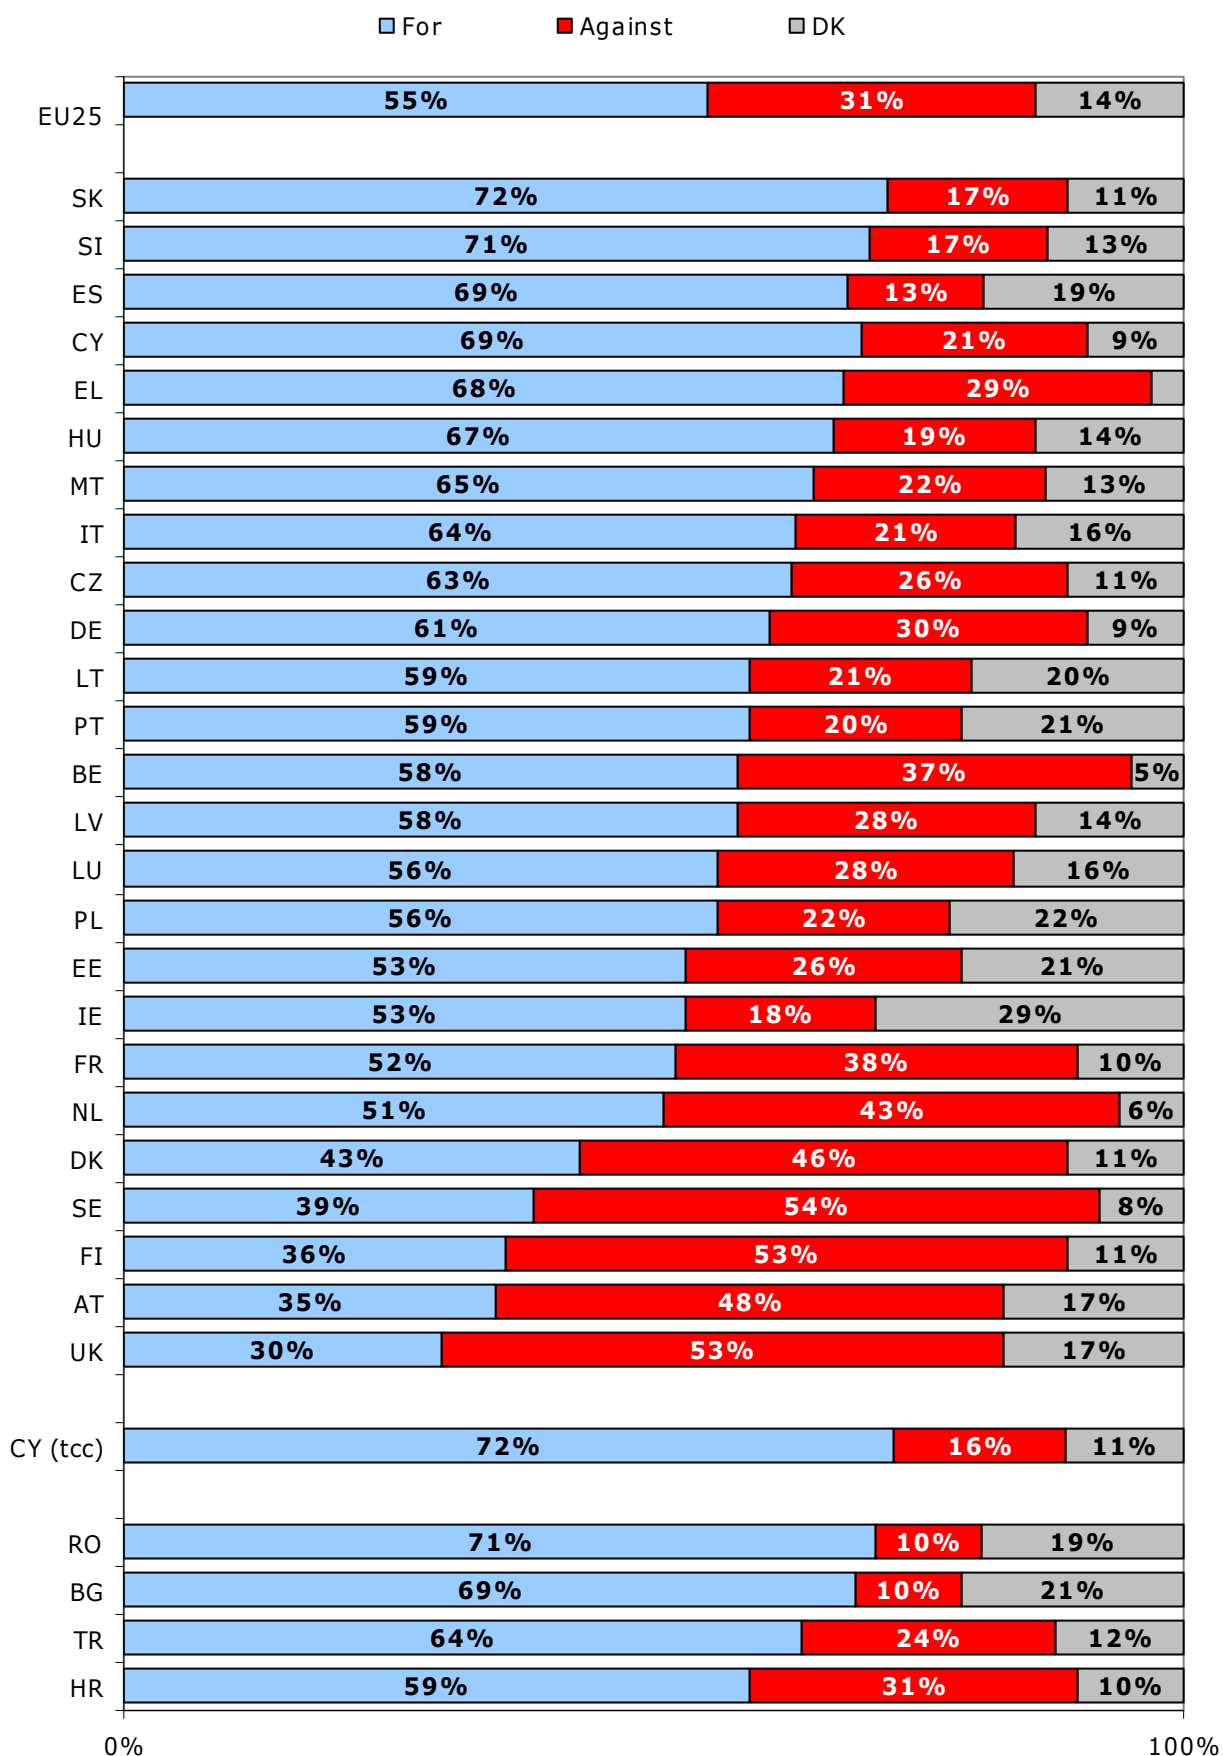

Analysis of the national results show that more than half of the citizens in each of the new Member States are in favour of a European political union. Support remains most widespread in Slovakia (72%, -2 points since spring 2004) and Slovenia (71%, -5 points) and least widespread in Estonia (53%, -6 points).

In two of the ten new Member States, support for a European political union has increased since last spring: Cyprus (69%, +6 points) and Malta (65%, +4 points). These are the only two Member States where a positive development has been recorded.

There is more variation in support levels among the fifteen old Member States. In the three Mediterranean countries (Spain: 69%, +1 since spring 2004; Greece: 68%, +1; Italy: 64%, -5) support is most widespread whereas it is least widespread in the United Kingdom: 30%, -4; Austria: 35%, -5; Finland: 36%, -2; and Sweden: 39%, -3).

Finally, the people in the accession and candidate countries are very receptive of the idea of a European political Union: on average, support is obtained from two-thirds of the citizens of these four countries.

Support for the development towards a European political union

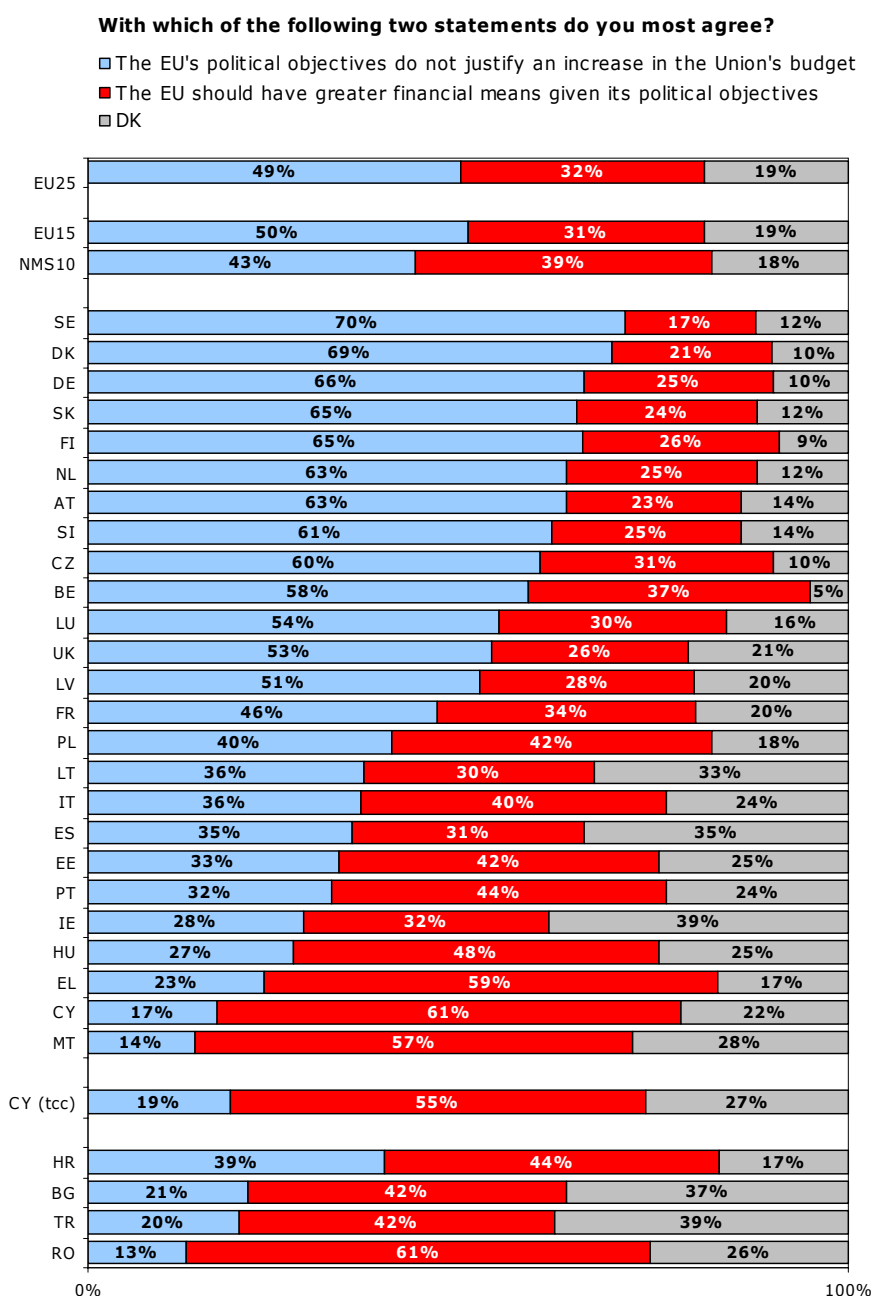

1.2. The European Union's future financial means

For the second consecutive time, the Eurobarometer measures whether or not the European Union's political objectives justify an increase in its financial resources⁵⁹.

- Limited support for an increase in the EU's budget -

As observed last spring, only 32% of respondents find that the Union should have greater financial means given its political objectives. However, a number of significant developments have taken place at the country level. A shift towards less outright opposition to an increase in the budget has been recorded in the Netherlands, Lithuania, Spain, Greece, Ireland, Denmark, Finland and Hungary.

⁵⁹ QA36. With which of the following two statements do you most agree? 1. The European Union should have greater financial means given its political objectives; 2. The European Union's political objectives do not justify an increase in the Union's budget

The survey indicates that on average people in the ten new Member States are more open to the idea of increasing the European Union's budget for political purposes than are residents in the fifteen old Member States (39% versus 31%).

At a national level, people in Cyprus (61%), Greece (59%) and Malta (57%) are most likely to support the idea of an increase in the budget whereas people in Sweden (70%), Denmark (69%), Germany (66%), Finland (65%) and Slovakia (65%) are most likely to oppose this.

In the accession and candidate countries, Romania stands out as having much broader support for an increased budget (61%) than is the case in the other three countries.

Finally, it is to be noted that in numerous countries a large percentage of respondents felt unable to express an opinion on this question.

The strongest support for an increase of the European Union's budget, taking into account its political objectives, is to be found among students, young people and respondents who consider that they know a great deal about European affairs.

1.3. The perceived and desired speed of building Europe

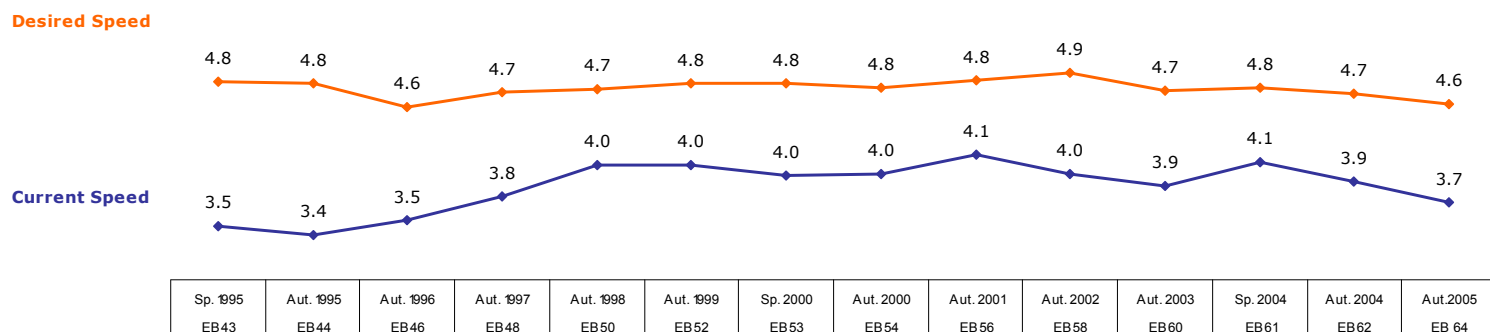

The perception of the speed of building the European Union is measured in the Eurobarometer by a visual graph showing a moving figure linked to values. An average is calculated on that basis⁶⁰. This question distinguishes between the perceived current and desired speed of building Europe.

- The gap between the current speed and the desired speed of building Europe increases -

Both the perceived current speed and the desired speed of building Europe have decreased since autumn 2004 and are at a level comparable to that measured in 1997.

Public opinion is thus in line with the Union's current period of reflection regarding the future of Europe: the perceived development of Europe is not as fast as it has been in previous years and the desire for an increase in the speed is less pronounced than it has been in the past.

- ◆ Citizens in Greece and Portugal have the most pronounced wish to see the building of Europe go faster. There is a differential of 2.5 and 2.3 points respectively between the current speed of building Europe and the desired speed.
- ◆ In Luxembourg and Ireland, the persons interviewed seem to be satisfied with the speed of building Europe since they give an almost equivalent score to the current perceived speed and the desired speed (between +0.1 and -0.1).
- ◆ In Austria, the respondents are concerned about the current speed of building Europe and would like to see it slow down (+0.7). Moreover, Austrians give the lowest score to the desired speed for building Europe.
- ◆ The four candidate countries would like to see the building of Europe speeded up. The biggest difference between the current and the desired speed is to be found in Turkey (+1.9 points), followed by Romania, Bulgaria (1.7) and finally Croatia (1.3).

A socio-demographic analysis of the differential between the perceived speed and desired speed of building Europe highlights the following points among European Union respondents:

- ◆ The younger respondents (aged between 15 and 24) are slightly more in favour of the speed of building Europe being accelerated.
- ◆ The longer respondents have stayed in full-time education, the more they favour an increase in the speed of building Europe.
- ◆ Respondents who have a positive image of the European Union want to build Europe even quickly.

1.4. Towards a two-speed Europe?

- European opinion is divided on the idea of a two-speed Europe -

In line with the previous results, citizens in Europe remain divided between those who support the idea of building Europe faster in one group of countries, and those who are against the idea of a two-speed Europe⁶¹.

Some 44% of respondents do not want a two-speed Europe. That percentage is slightly up from last spring (+2 points). On the other hand, 39% of the persons interviewed hold the opposite view (+1 point). One respondent in six lacks an opinion (17%, -3 points).

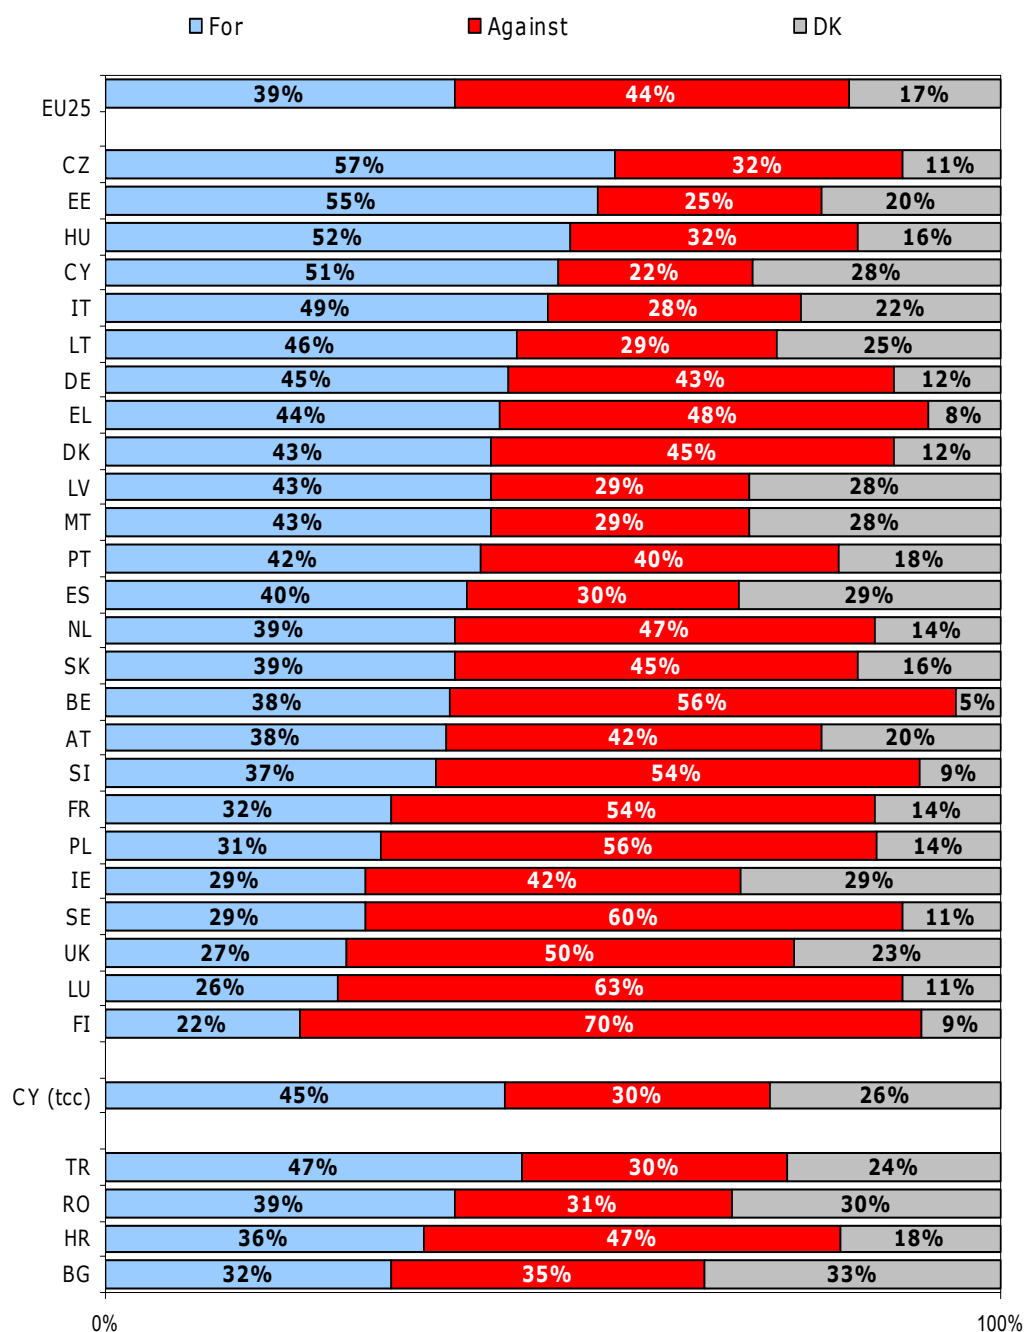

The only four countries where just over half of the population is in favour of a two-speed Europe are the Czech Republic (57%), Estonia (55%), Hungary (52%) and Cyprus (51%), all countries that joined the Union during the last enlargement. In Poland, only 3 out of 10 people support this idea (31%, -6 points) and in Slovenia (37%, -8 points) and Slovakia (39%, -8 points) this is also true for less than 4 out of 10 people.

Nonetheless, public opinion is generally more supportive of the idea of a two-speed Europe in the new Member States than it is in the old Member States. Here, support is most widespread in Italy (49%, -5 points). In Germany (45%), Portugal (42%) and Spain (40%) it is also the majority view.

⁶¹ QA32.6 What is your opinion on each of the following statement? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.
The speed of building Europe being faster in one group of countries than in the other countries

On the other hand, a broad majority of respondents in Finland (70%, +6 points) opposes the idea of a two-speed Europe. There is also widespread opposition in Luxembourg (63%, +11 points), Sweden (60%, +10 points), Belgium (56%, +7 points), France (54%, +1 points) and the United Kingdom (50%, -3 points).

1.5. Fears provoked by the building of Europe

This part of the report examines the various fears of European citizens with regard to the building of Europe⁶².

- The transfer of jobs tops the list, once again -

In general, the scores for most of the fears on which the interviewees were asked to express their views have increased slightly since the spring 2005 survey.

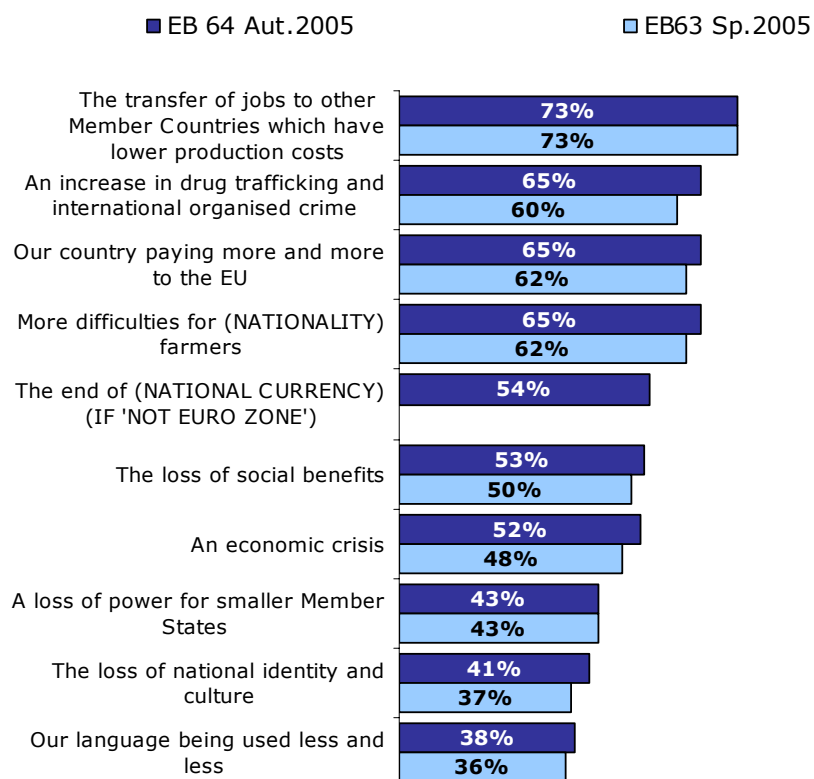

In autumn 2005, the main fear is the same as that noted six months earlier, namely the transfer of jobs to other Member States with lower production costs (73%). Next, just under two-thirds of respondents are worried at the present time about the increasing cost for the Member States of building Europe (65%, +3 points), the increasing difficulties facing national farmers (65%, +3 points) and the increase in crime and drug trafficking (65%, +5 points).

In addition, over half of European Union citizens are also worried about the loss of social benefits (53%, +3 points) and the economic crisis (52%, +4 points).

Furthermore, 43% of the persons interviewed seem to fear a loss of power for the smallest Member States, while 41% fear a loss of national identities and cultures (+4 points).

At the bottom of the list we find the gradual loss of national language, which is nonetheless a cause for concern for 38% of respondents.

2. The Constitution and its future

The European Constitution is the focus of this chapter. We look at public opinion in a much-changed setting that came about after the negative outcome of the French and Dutch referenda.

2.1. Support for a European Constitution

- Support for a European Constitution remains widespread -

Despite the negative outcome of the referenda in France and the Netherlands to ratify the European Constitution and the subsequent political debate about the future of the Constitution, support for the idea of a European Constitution remains widespread. 63% of European citizens are now for a constitution for the European Union, against 21% who oppose this idea⁶³.

It is important to emphasise that this question measures the extent to which people agree with the actual concept of a Constitution for the European Union and is not an evaluation of the content of the treaty. Thus, the results should not be seen as an intention of how citizens would vote if referenda were to be organised nor linked directly to the outcome of referenda that have already been held. Nevertheless, the results obtained for France and the Netherlands cannot be ignored.

This Standard Eurobarometer survey indicates that support for the idea of a constitution is now more widespread in France and the Netherlands than it was in spring 2005. In the Netherlands, the percentage of people who support the idea of a constitution has increased by 9 points from 53% to 62%. The percentage that opposes this idea has gone down from 38% to 34%. In France, favourable responses have increased by 7 points to 67%. This is accompanied by an equally large drop in unfavourable responses so that the percentage of people in France who disagree that the European Union should have a Constitution now stands at 21%.

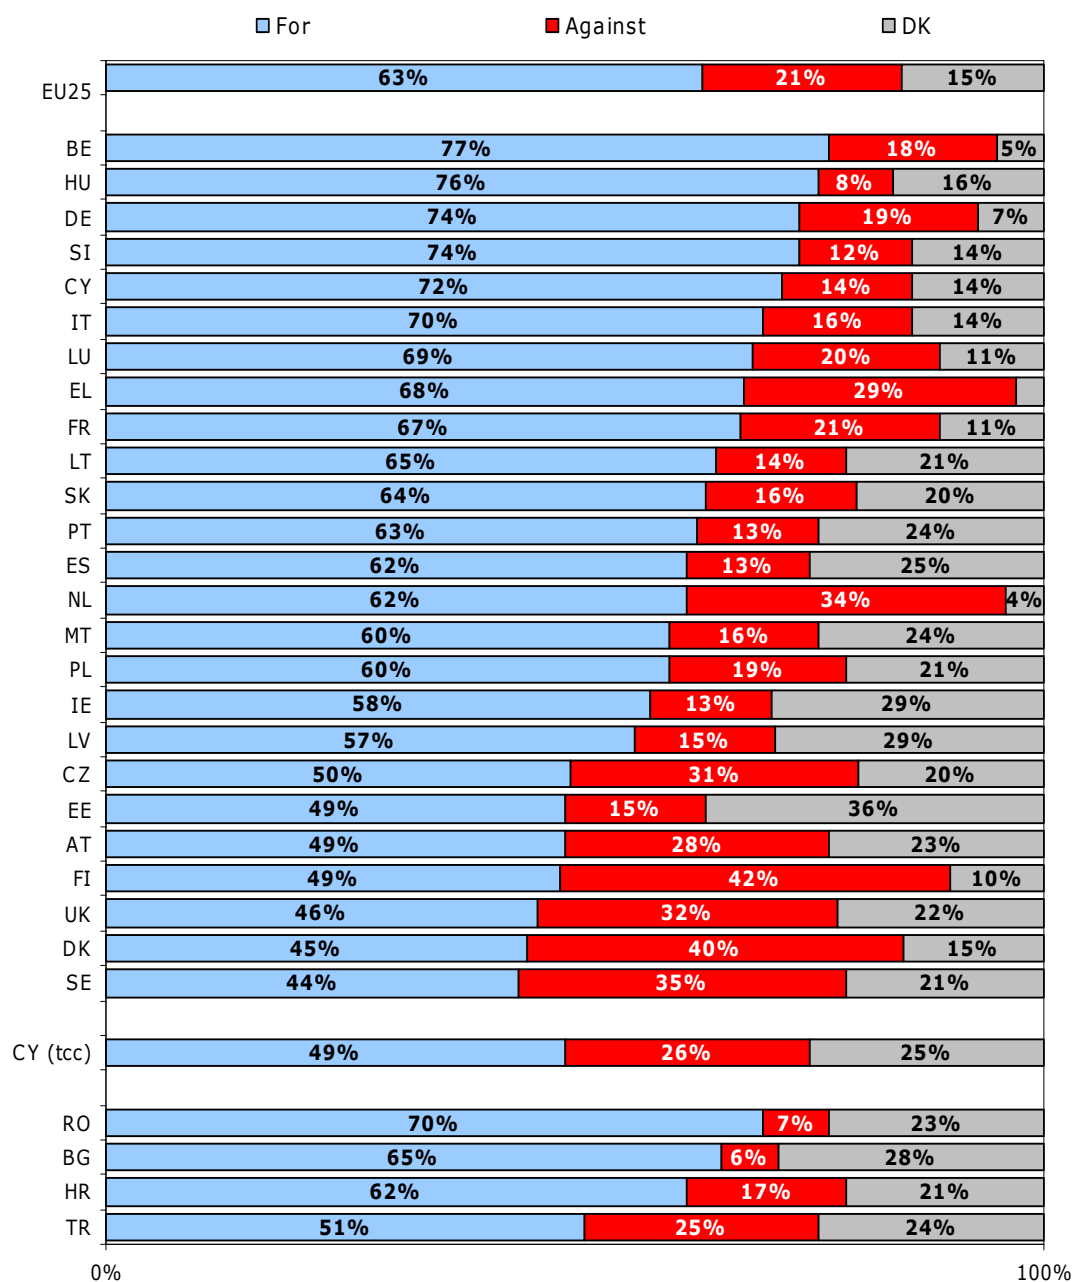

⁶³ QA32.5. What is your opinion on each of the following statement? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.
A constitution for the European Union

The increased support for a European Constitution does not only pertain to France and the Netherlands but also applies to numerous other countries and in particular to Malta, Greece, the Czech Republic, Luxembourg, Sweden and Germany.

The idea of a constitution for the European Union is most favourably received in Belgium (77%), followed by Hungary (76%), Germany and Slovenia (both 74%). Opinion is more divided in Denmark (with 45% for and 40% against) and Finland (49% and 42%, respectively). It is also to be noted that particularly in a number of countries a significant number of respondents has not (yet) formed an opinion. This applies to more than one third of the respondents in Estonia (36% of DK replies) and close to 3 out of 10 respondents in Ireland and Latvia (both 29%).

Support for a Constitution for the European Union

An analysis of the socio-demographic characteristics of the persons interviewed in the European Union highlights the following points:

- ◆ More men than women are in favour of a Constitution (66% versus 61%), while women tend to find it more difficult to express an opinion on this issue (19% versus 15%).
- ◆ Support for a European Constitution seems to be less pronounced among older people, who have more difficulty in expressing an opinion on this subject.
- ◆ The longer people stayed in full-time education, the more they support the Constitution.
- ◆ Citizens on the left of the political spectrum are more in favour of a European Constitution than those on the right are.
- ◆ Finally, the more respondents feel they know about the European Union, the more they are in favour of the idea of a European Constitution.

- Majority support the European Constitution -

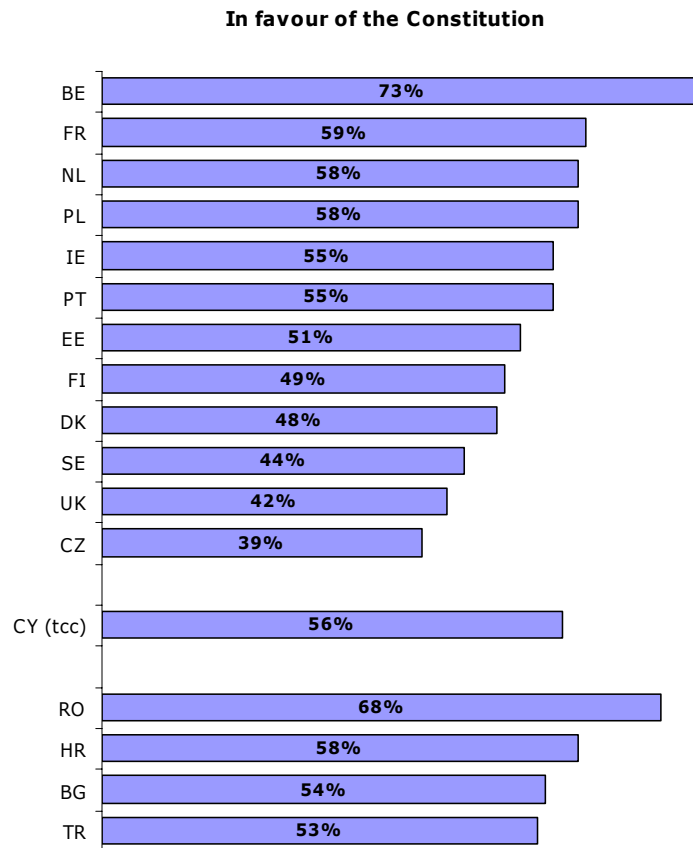

The question regarding the support for the current Constitution⁶⁴ has not been asked in countries, which had already ratified the Constitution at the time of this survey (namely Spain, Italy, Greece, Slovenia, Hungary, Luxembourg, Cyprus, Malta, Slovakia, Latvia, Austria, Germany and Lithuania), with the exception of France and the Netherlands.

Overall, in these countries surveyed, 53% of the persons interviewed are in favour of the European Constitution, while 29% of respondents are opposed to it. It is to be noted that around a fifth of citizens did not express an opinion on this subject (19%).

An analysis of the results by country highlights strong differences, with support ranging from 39% in the Czech Republic to 73% in Belgium.

Close to six out of ten people in France (59%) and the Netherlands (58%) are in favour of the Constitution. This cannot be interpreted as a change in the mind of the French and the Dutch since a lot of reasons can explain these results: amongst them the difference between the structure of the sample and the profile of those who took part in the vote is a major element to take into consideration. In fact, a significant proportion of people that answered this question did not take part in the referenda.

In the accession and candidate countries, where the question was also asked, support is widespread and ranges from 53% in Turkey to 68% in Romania.

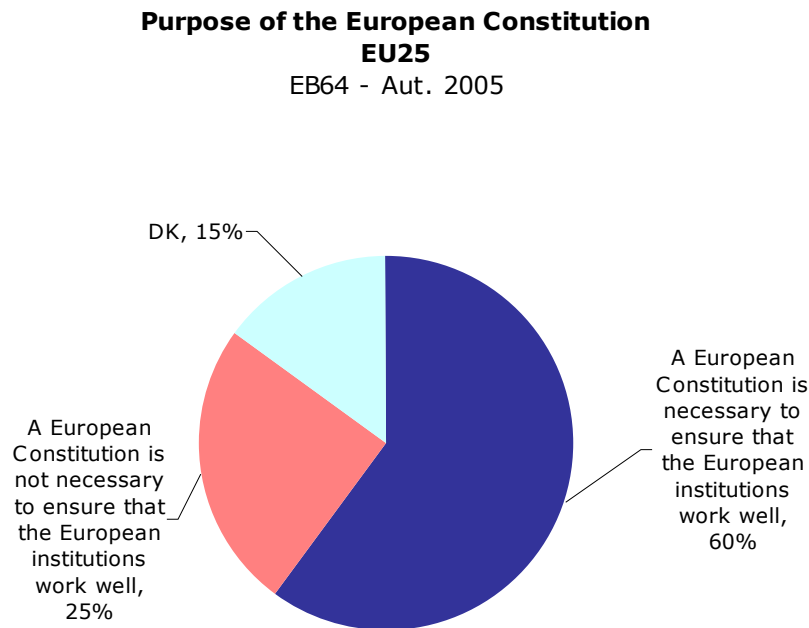

⁶⁴ QA46. According to what you know, would you say that you are in favour of or opposed to the European Constitution?

2.2. The future of the European Constitution

- Majority view is that the EU needs a Constitution but that it should be renegotiated -

Even though the ratification process of the European Constitution is currently on hold due to the negative outcome of the referenda in France and the Netherlands, the majority of European citizens are of the view that a European Constitution is necessary to ensure that the European institutions work well ⁶⁵.

In the 15 old Member States this view is somewhat more pronounced than is the case in the 10 new Member States (61% versus 56%). However, analysis at the country level indicates that at 78%, this opinion receives most widespread support in Belgium – an 'old' Member and Slovenia – a 'new' Member and that opposition to this view is most widespread in two of the 'old' Member States: Finland (51%) and the Netherlands (50%).

Focusing further on the two countries where the electorate voted against the Constitution shows that public opinion in the Netherlands is divided but that in France, at 68%, there is widespread support for the view that a European Constitution is necessary to ensure that the European institutions work well.

⁶⁵ QA50 Which of the following two statements best describes your view...

A European Constitution is necessary to ensure that the European Institutions work well

An analysis of the socio-demographic characteristics of the persons interviewed in the European Union highlights the following points:

- ♦ The longer people stayed in full-time education, the more likely they are to feel that the European Constitution is necessary to ensure that the European institutions work well.
- ♦ Citizens on the left of the political spectrum are more likely to feel that the European Constitution is necessary to ensure that the European institutions work well than those on the right are.
- ♦ The higher people score on the opinion leadership index, the more likely they are to feel that the European Constitution is necessary to ensure that the European institutions work well.

Why many European citizens feel that the Union needs a Constitution is further illustrated by the answers to the next two questions⁶⁶. As was the case in the spring of 2005, when the ratification process was still under way, the majority of European Union citizens considers that adoption of the Treaty will make the way in which the European Union functions more democratic (64%), more efficient (61%) and more transparent (56%).

⁶⁶ QA47 and QA48. For each of the following please tell me whether you totally agree, tend to agree, tend to disagree or totally disagree. If all Member States adopt the Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe, it will make the running of the European Union...?

Equally, the majority of European Citizens continue to feel that adoption of the European Constitution would strengthen the Union's position in the world (69%), would make it economically more competitive (64%) and would make it more socially minded (54%).

These results mirror those obtained in the spring 2005 survey.

Clearly therefore, public opinion about the future of the European Constitution is optimistic. However, the most widespread view is that the Constitution should be renegotiated (49%). Around one citizen in five feels that the Member States should continue the ratification process (22%) and only a small minority of European citizens believes that the European Constitution should be dropped (13%)⁶⁷.

⁶⁷ QA49 13 countries have ratified the European Constitution, but France and the Netherlands voted "no". Which of the following best describes your view...

This is the majority view in all Member States, with the exception of Malta where support to continue the ratification process is most popular (41%). The people of France (65%) and the Netherlands (64%) are most likely to hold the view that the European Constitution should be renegotiated. The outcome of the referendum in these two countries has certainly not resulted in a desire to drop the European Constitution altogether: only 15% and 16%, respectively, hold this view. The desire to discontinue the ratification process is least strong in Hungary (4%). It is most widespread among the Danish people (31%), who tend to be fairly critical about the democratic processes of the European Union.

The analysis of the socio-demographic characteristics of the persons interviewed in the European Union highlights the following points:

3. Support for future enlargement

In this chapter, we analyse public opinion towards future enlargement. We firstly look at public support for future enlargement and then analyse how support levels vary depending on which countries would join the European Union. We end the chapter by focusing on the question of Turkey.

3.1. Support for further enlargement

- Close to half of EU citizens support further enlargement but the gap between those in favour and those against narrows -

The latest survey shows that 49% of the respondents in the 25 current Member States are in favour of further enlargement of the European Union in future years and that 39% oppose this⁶⁸. Although very similar to the results obtained in spring 2005, a further narrowing of the gap between supporters and opponents can be observed pointing to a more critical attitude towards further enlargement.

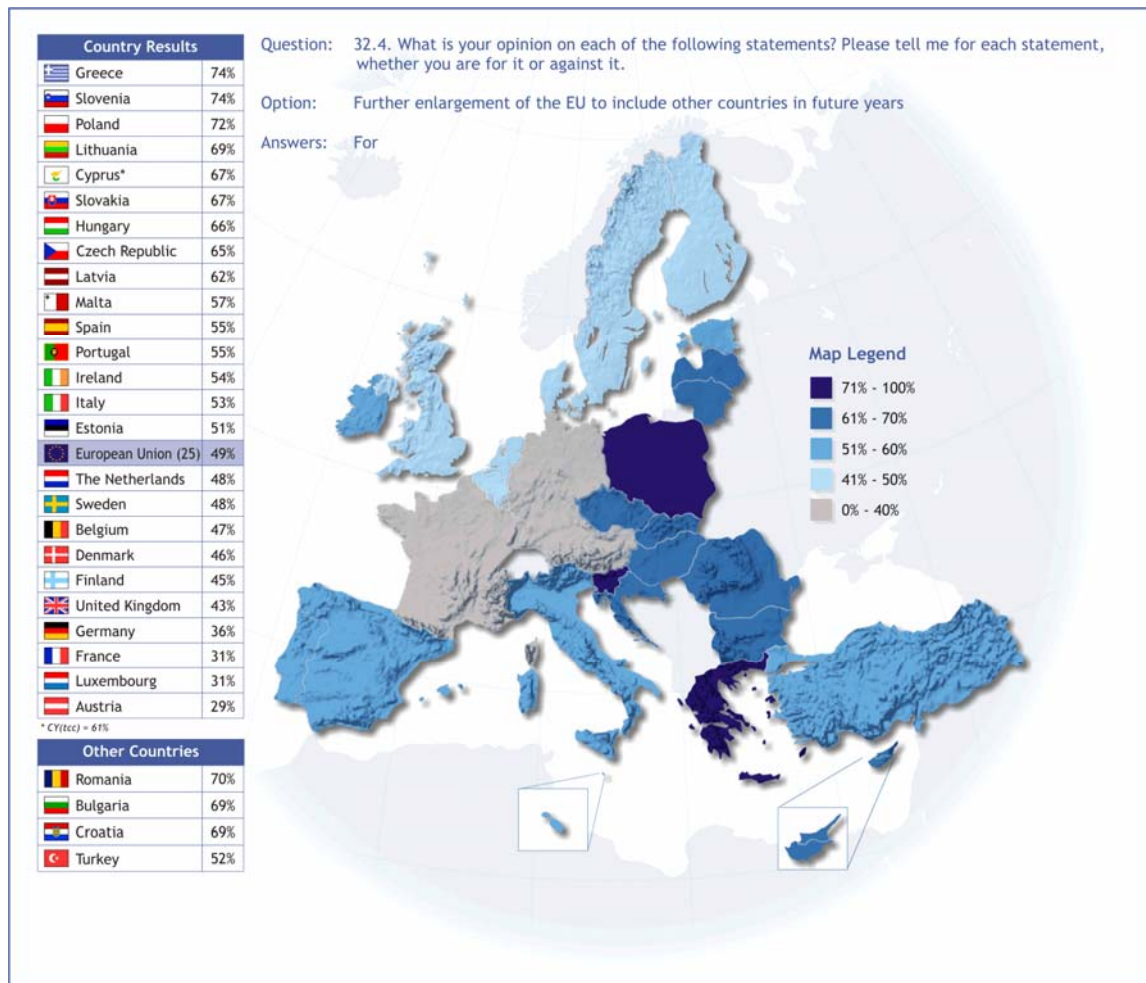

Public opinion about further enlargement continues to be volatile and to vary significantly from country to country, with highest support levels obtained in Greece (74%), Slovenia (74%) and Poland (72%). This contrasts sharply with the reluctance, if not outright opposition to further enlargement in Austria, Luxembourg, France and Germany, where around 6 out of 10 respondents are against further enlargement.

In the accession and candidate countries around 7 out of 10 persons interviewed support further enlargement, with the exception of Turkey, where support levels dropped from 66% in spring 2005 to 52% in autumn 2005.

⁶⁸ QA32.4. What is your opinion on each of the following statements? Please tell me for each statement, whether you are for it or against it.

Further enlargement of the European Union to include other countries in future years.

Support for further enlargement of the European Union continues to be stronger in the ten new Member States. Although the size of the difference between the results obtained in the fifteen old Member States and the ten new Member States (25 points) highlights the diversity of opinions as regards the geographical evolution of the European Union, it is slightly less pronounced than was the case in spring 2005.

This development is due to large shifts at the national level. In Greece, support for further enlargement increased by 14 points. The recent developments with regards to the joining of Turkey have clearly positively influenced public opinion in Greece on this topic. Conversely, support in Turkey has dropped by similar proportions.

In six of the ten new Member States there is now less outright support for enlargement. In Latvia, Lithuania, Slovenia and Cyprus, this translates into increased levels of opposition, while in Estonia, Malta, Slovakia and Poland people now appear less certain of their views towards further enlargement.

In addition to Greece, public opinion in the 15 'old' Member States appears to be somewhat more positive in the Netherlands and Germany. On the other hand, in Sweden, Italy, Denmark and the United Kingdom, opposition to further enlargement increased significantly.

A socio-demographic analysis indicates that the largest differences of opinion on this issue exist depending on people's age and education but that people's political views, subjective urbanisation and placement on the opinion leadership index are also important in explaining differences.

3.2. The choice of future Member States

- Switzerland and Norway top the list -

When analysed in detail, support for further enlargement reveals strong support for the accession of three member countries of the European Free Trade Association (EFTA): Iceland (68%) and in particular Norway (77%) and Switzerland (77%)⁶⁹.

Support is also relatively widespread for Croatia (51%) and Bulgaria (48%). Public opinion is more divided for Romania, Ukraine, Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia and Montenegro.

Finally, a clear majority of citizens are opposed to membership being granted to Turkey or Albania: 55% and 50% respectively of citizens are opposed to their accession.

⁶⁹ QA44. For each of the following countries, would you be in favour or against it becoming part of the European Union in the future?

Citizens in the new Member States also have a more open and approving attitude than respondents in the fifteen old Member States in terms of support for the inclusion of specific countries. However, in comparison to spring 2005, public opinion in the new Member States has become significantly more negative with regards to all the countries included in the list, whereas the shift in the fifteen old Member States is more moderate.

3.3. The question of Turkey

In order to complete this chapter devoted to the further enlargement of the European Union, we shall analyse briefly the opinions of European Union citizens regarding Turkey, using a series of nine statements with which respondents were asked to indicate whether or not they agreed⁷⁰.

- Turkish accession should be subject to certain conditions -

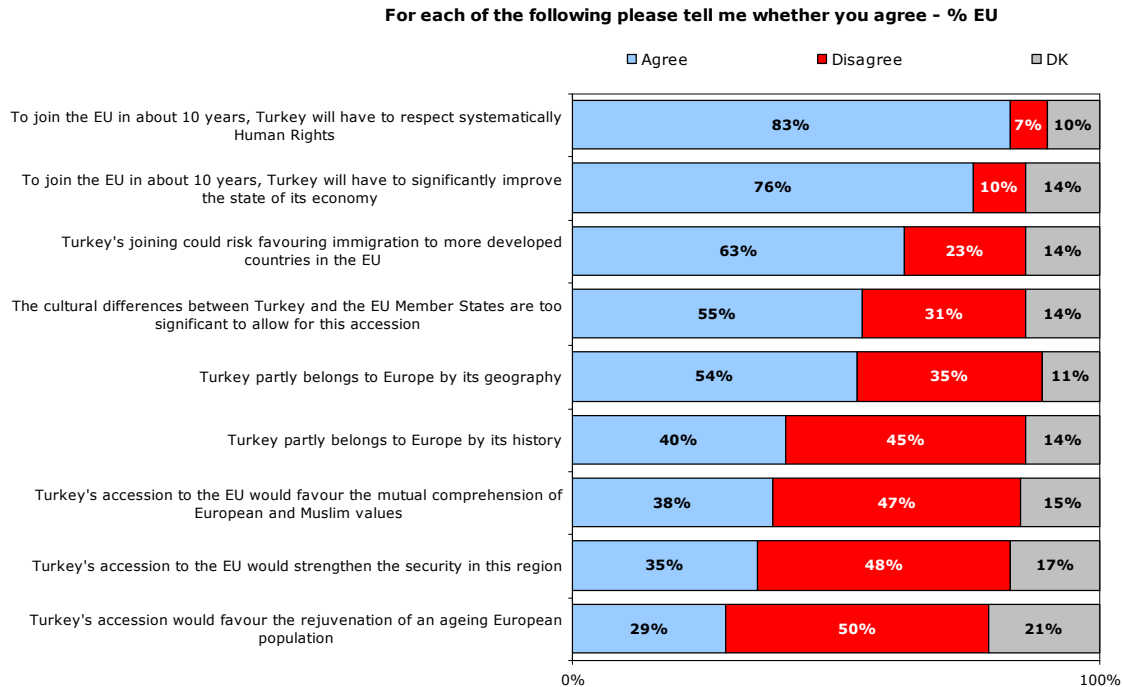

According to European Union citizens, Turkish membership of the Europe Union must absolutely be subject to two conditions: the systematic respect for human rights (83%, - 1 point since spring 2005) and a significant improvement in its economic level (76%).

More than six out of ten persons interviewed fear that Turkish membership would encourage immigration to the most developed countries in the European Union (63%).

Some 54% of respondents consider that Turkey partly belongs to Europe by its geography (-1 point), while 40% of respondents consider that Turkey partly belongs to Europe by its history (-2 points).

According to 55% of the persons interviewed in the European Union, the cultural differences between Turkey and the Member States are too important to allow its accession (+1 point). However, 38% of respondents consider that Turkish membership would favour the mutual comprehension of European and Muslim values (-3 points), while 47% (+3 points) think the opposite.

Finally, 48% of European Union citizens do not think that Turkish membership would strengthen security in the region, while 35% agree with that proposal. One respondent out of two is sceptical about the beneficial effects of Turkish membership in terms of decreasing the average age of the European population (50%).

⁷⁰ QA45. For each of the following please tell me whether you totally agree, tend to agree, tend to disagree or totally disagree.

In Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Finland and Sweden there is near unanimity concerning the view that Turkey will have to systematically respect Human Rights with more than 9 out of 10 respondents agreeing in these countries. At 61%, people in Cyprus are least likely to agree. In Turkey itself, 69% of those interviewed adhere to this view.

There is very little opposition throughout the Member States concerning the view that Turkey will have to improve significantly its economic level and differences in the level of agreement are mostly accounted for by differences in the level of "don't know" responses. Nonetheless, the broadest level of agreement is found in Greece (92%), Finland (91%) and Belgium (90%).

V. THE EUROPEAN UNION AND GLOBALISATION

In the final part of this report, we look at how life in the European Union compares to life in other world economies and we analyse the opinion of European citizens with regards to globalisation: to what extent do they feel part of the world, what does globalisation mean and what are its perceived effects?

1. The European Union compared to other world players

This first chapter provides a comparison between the European Union and the United States, Japan, China and India in terms of economic growth and quality of life. In particular it offers an in-depth analysis of how European citizens compare the European Union and the United States with regards to ten key issues.

1.1. Economic comparisons

We begin by analysing how European citizens compare the performance of their economy with that of other world economies, such as the United States, Japan, China and India⁷¹.

- Most citizens underestimate the rapid growth of the emerging economies -

This latest survey shows that opinions of European citizens about the performance of the European economy in comparison to that of other world economies have not changed significantly since the previous survey. A majority of respondents continues to believe that the European economy is not as good as that of Japan (45% versus 20%) or the United States (37% versus 21%).

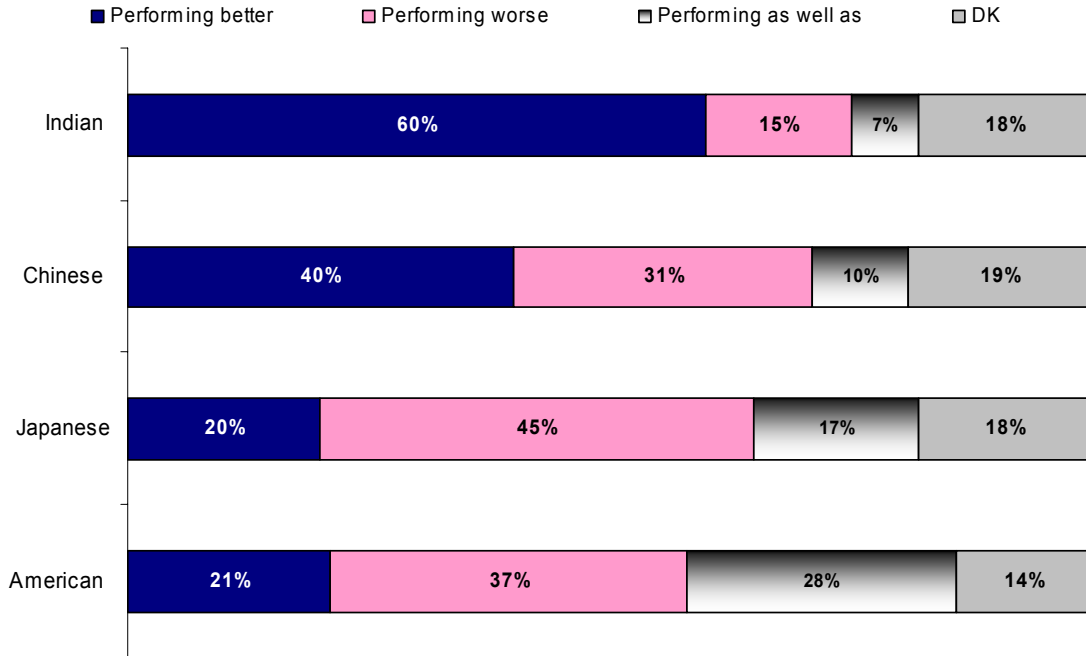

Despite the rapid growth of the Chinese and Indian economies, most European citizens still believe that these economies perform less well than the European economy. This is particularly true for the Indian economy: 60% of respondents believe that the European economy is performing better and only 15% think that it is performing less well than the Indian economy.

An analysis of opinions by country highlights certain exceptions:

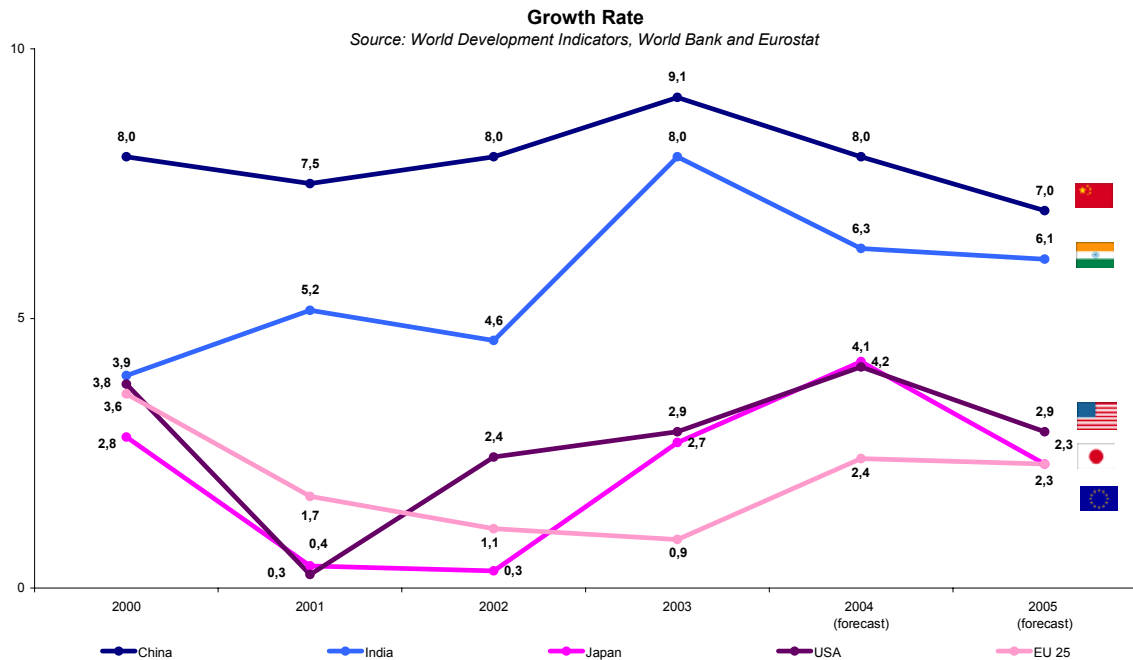

- ◆ Citizens in Finland, Denmark, the Netherlands and Sweden consider that the European economy is more dynamic than that of the United States.
- ◆ In the candidate and accession countries, Turkish citizens remain more enthusiastic as regards the economic performance of the European Union compared with the three other economic powers.

⁷¹ QA52 Would you say that the European economy is performing better, performing worse or performing as well as the economy of...?

Would you say that the European economy is performing better, performing worse or performing as well as the ... economy?

Looking at the actual growth rates of these five geographical entities, the results of the survey show that European citizens are starting to become aware of China's tremendous economic growth. However, they remain relatively unaware of the growth of the Indian economy.

EU data: EUROSTAT- General economic situation- growth rate of real GDP- last update 14-April-2005

Data on India, United States, Japan and China: World Bank- "World development indicators 2004", published on 23 April 2004

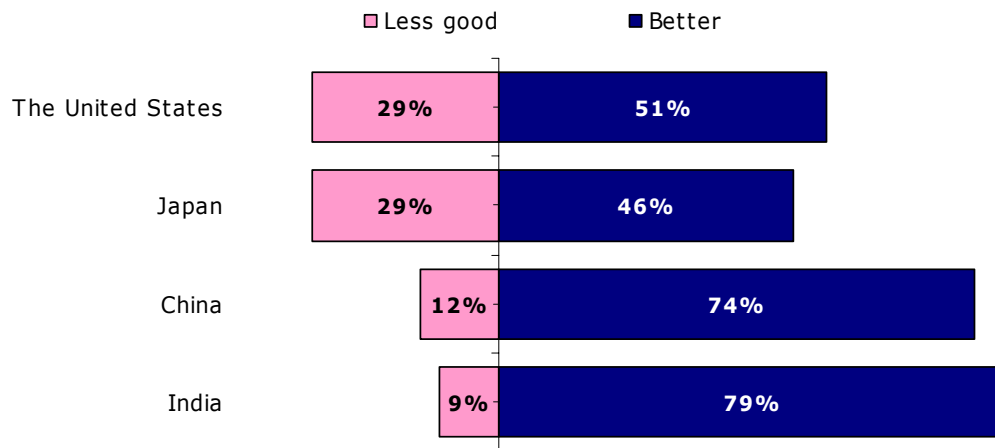

1.2. Comparison of quality of life

Next we analyse how European citizens compare the quality of life in Europe with that of the United States, Japan, China and India⁷².

- Quality of life in Europe is deemed incomparable -

For many European citizens, the level of quality of life in Europe is better than it is in the aforementioned major countries. This is particularly true when compared with India and China, but also to a lesser extent in comparison with Japan and the United States.

In general, would you say that the quality of life in Europe at the moment is better or less good than in... ?

As was observed when comparing the country's economic situation with the quality of life, these results show that people tend not to link quality of life to a country's economic performance.

⁷² QA51. In general, would you say that the standard of the quality of life in Europe at the moment is better or less good than in...?

The results show the continuing existence of significant differences depending on the respondent's country. Respondents in the ten new Member States are generally more critical about the quality of European life compared with that of the United States or Japan. However, this criticism is less pronounced than it was in spring 2005. Generally, the view that quality of life is better in Europe than in the four nations compared has increased since the previous survey both in the new and old Member States.

% « Better »	Comparison of the standard of quality of life in Europe
	EU25		EU15		NMS
Country	EB63	EB64	EB63	EB64	EB63	EB64
India	76%	79%	77%	80%	68%	74%
China	70%	74%	71%	74%	64%	70%
The United States	46%	51%	51%	55%	23%	26%
Japan	44%	46%	48%	50%	25%	27%

From a socio-demographic point of view, there are certain significant differences:

- ♦ The longer respondents remained in full-time education, the greater the difference between their perception of the quality of life in Europe and that in other countries and the more they favour Europe.
- ♦ Especially with regards to the United States but also in respect of Japan, people who place themselves on the left of the political scale are more likely to favour quality of life in Europe than are people who place themselves on the right of the scale.

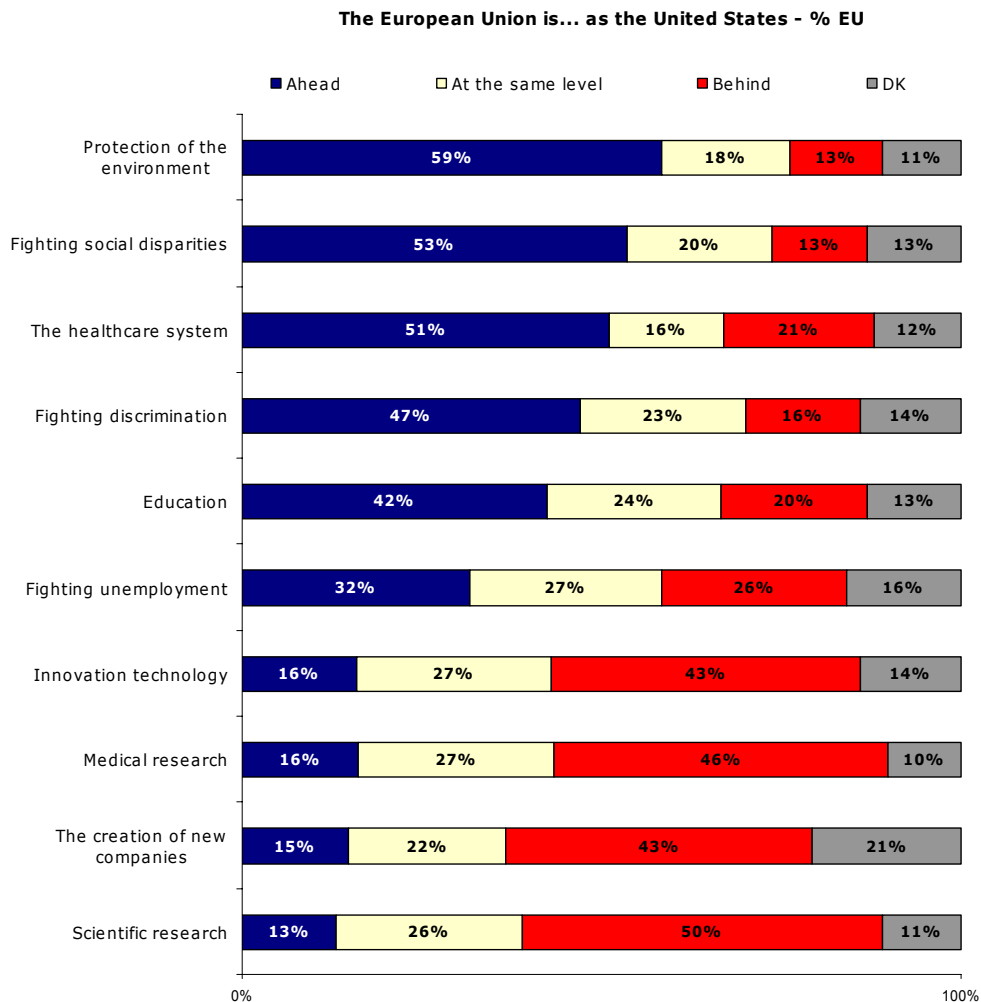

1.3. In-depth comparison with the United States

Whilst European citizens feel that the performance of the European economy lags behind that of the United States, opinions are quite the opposite when it comes to a number of other areas⁷³.

- Social issues better in Europe whilst the US do better in research and development -

When it comes to protecting the environment, social disparities, healthcare, discrimination, education and unemployment, the majority view among European citizens is that the European Union is ahead of the United States. Americans are seen to be ahead of Europeans when it comes to science, technology and the creation of companies.

These results are in line with the earlier reported finding that quality of life is better in the European Union and provide insight into the reasons why the U.S. economy is seen to be performing better than the European economy.

⁷³ QA53. For each of the following, please tell me whether in your opinion the European Union is ahead, behind or at the same level as the United States?

We focus first on the six social issues, where Europe is seen as being ahead of the United States. The first relevant finding here is that in comparison to the spring 2005 results, Europeans are even more likely to feel that the European Union is ahead of the United States in these areas.

European citizens are most likely to feel that the European Union is ahead of the United States in terms of protecting of the environment (59%, +4 points since spring 2005). More than half of European citizens also believe the European Union is ahead of the United States when it comes to fighting social disparities (53%, +3 points) and the healthcare system (51%, +1 point). For the other three areas, public opinion is slightly less pronounced but still in favour of the European Union. Close to half of European citizens believe the European Union is ahead of the United States in the fight against discrimination (47%, +3 points), 42% believe the EU is ahead of the US in terms of education (+4 points) and 32% feel the EU is ahead of the US when it comes to the fight against unemployment (+2 points).

Medical research	16%	16%	15%
The creation of companies	15%	15%	13%
Scientific research	13%	13%	14%

The average recorded for the 25 European Union Member States conceals strong differences between the 15 old Member States and the 10 new member States.

Next we examine the issues that relate to science, technology and entrepreneurship, where the United States is seen to be ahead of the European Union. Here as well, the results indicate that European citizens now tend to rate the United States less positively than they did in spring 2005. Nonetheless, the majority view continues to be that the United States does better in scientific research (50%, -4 points), medical research (46%, -5 points), innovation technology (43%, -4 points) and the creation of companies (43%, -3 points).

As the table above shows, citizens in the 10 new Member States tend to be less likely than their counterparts in the 15 'old' Member States are to hold the view that the European Union is ahead of the United States in terms of the six social issues measured.

2. Globalisation

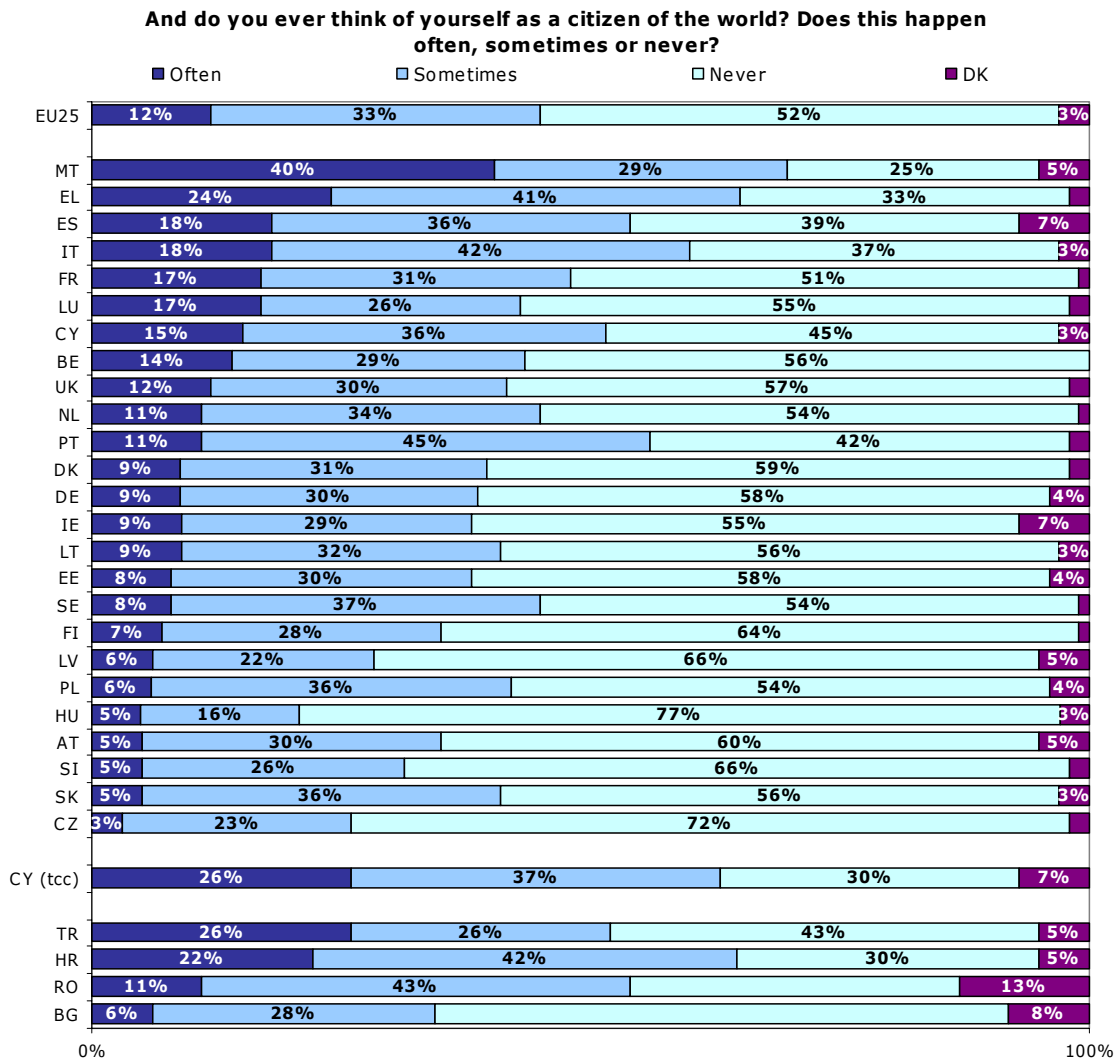

In a broad sense, globalisation is more than just an economic phenomenon and can be seen as a process in which geographic distance becomes less and less important. In this chapter we firstly examine to what extent European citizens feel part of global society. We then look more specifically at globalisation in an economic context.

2.1. World citizenship

In the context of globalisation, the question arises to what extent people see themselves as citizens of the world⁷⁴.

- World citizenship appears to be an abstract concept -

At this current point in time, the concept of “world citizenship” is not something that is frequently on people’s mind. In fact, the majority of respondents never think of themselves as citizens of the world (52%). Only 12% do this often and a third of the EU public sometimes feels like a citizen of the world (33%).

⁷⁴ QA43. And do you ever think of yourself as a citizen of the world? Does this happen often, sometimes or never?

However, these averages conceal some interesting significant geographical variations. In the Mediterranean countries - Malta (69%) Greece (65%), Croatia (64%), Italy (60%), Portugal (56%), Spain (54%), Romania (54%) and Cyprus (51%) – the majority of people (at least sometimes) feel like world citizens. At the other extreme the concept of world citizenship is hardly recognised in Hungary (77%), the Czech Republic (72%), Latvia (66%) and Slovenia (66%) where the broad majority of people never feel this way.

2.2. Increased competition

The creation of the single market a decade ago, has increased competition in a number of sectors. How does European public opinion perceive this increased competition⁷⁵?

- Increased competition is positively perceived -

According to the majority of European citizens, the increased competition brought about by the single market has a positive effect (58%) whilst only 18% believe it has a negative effect. The remaining quarter of respondents either takes a neutral view (12%) or lacks an opinion (12%).

Analysis of the socio-demographic characteristics of European citizens shows differences in the percentage of respondents who perceive positive effects. For instance, nearly seven out of ten people who stayed in full-time education until the age of 20 or older or who score highest on the self-perceived knowledge scale (both 69%) believe increased competition has a positive effect, compared to only 45% of people who score lowest on the opinion leadership index or who left full-time education before age 16. However, the percentage of respondents who perceive negative effects is relatively stable for all the various subgroups of the population.

⁷⁵ QA54. The single market has increased competition in a number of domains such as transport, telecommunication services, banking and insurance services. In general would you say that this has... effect?

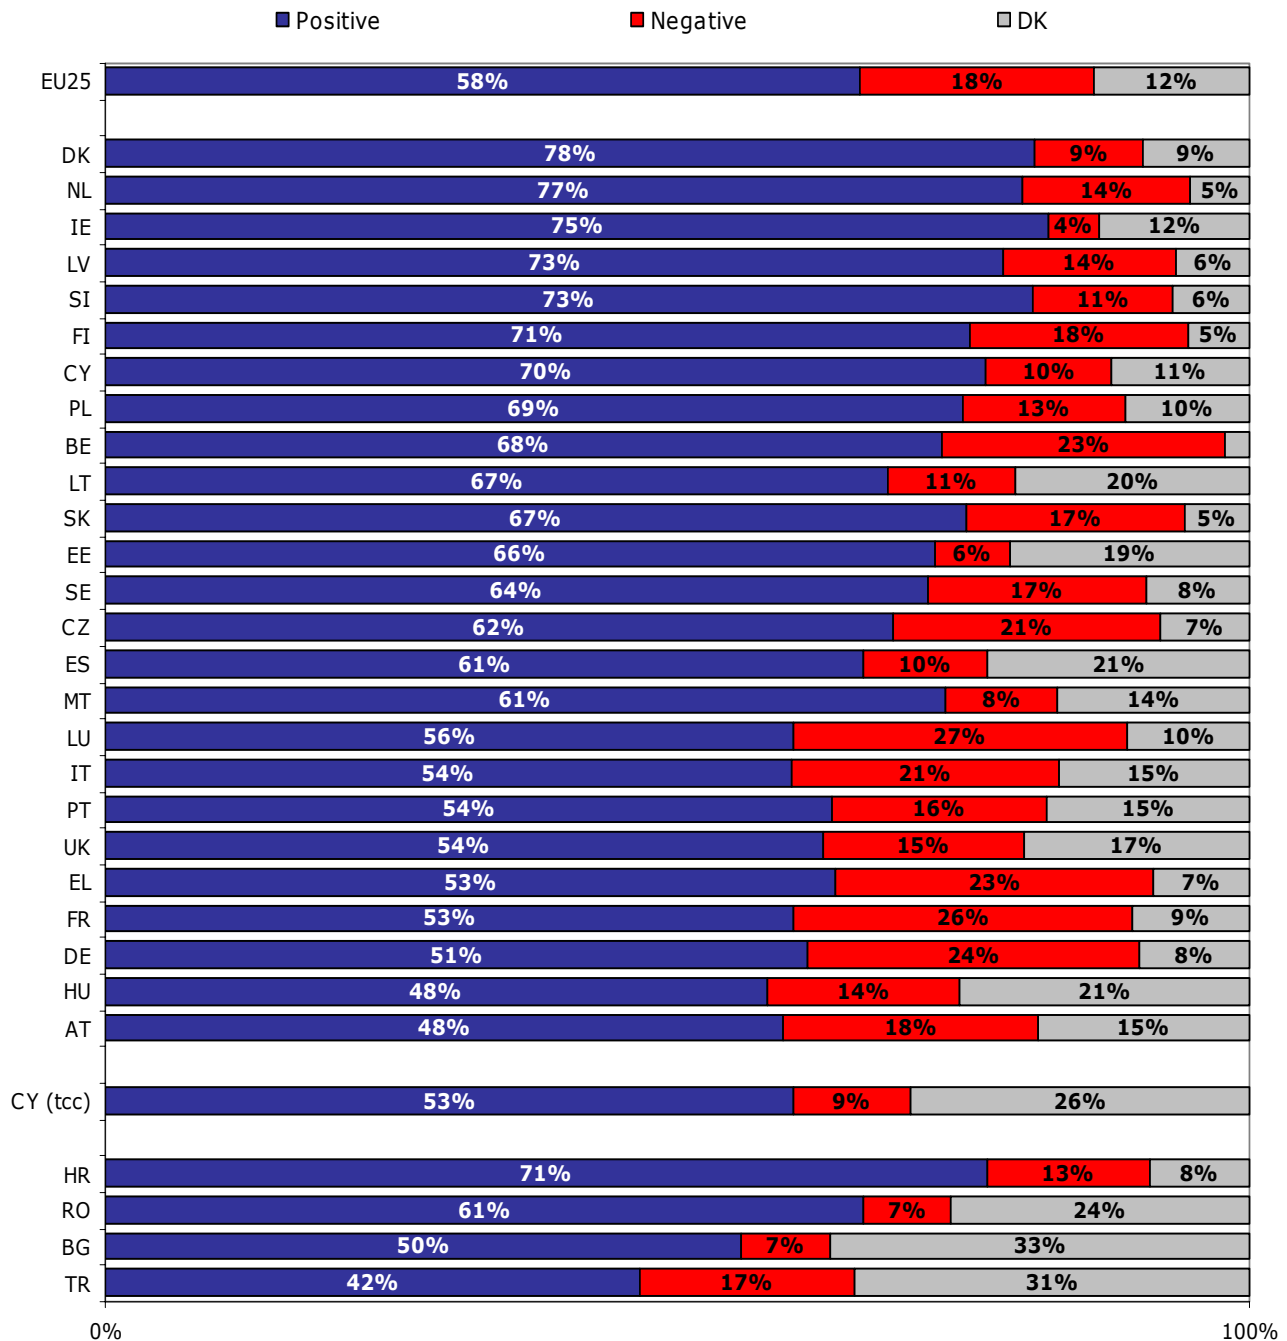

This observation does not hold in terms of people's attitude to the European Union. Depending on how people think about the European Union, we not only find significant differences in the percentage of people who feel that increased competition has positive effects but also in the percentages who think that the effects are negative.

In other words, the more one has a positive image of the EU, the more he/she is to see a positive effect of this increased competition.

Increased competition in a number of domains
	Positive effect	Negative effect
EU25	58%	18%

Trust in the EU

A comparison of public opinion between the old Member States and the new Member States in this regard shows that the latter are more likely to see a positive effect in increased competition (56% and 65%, respectively). Public opinion is fairly homogeneous in the new Member States, whereas clear divisions of opinion exist among the old Member States: in Denmark and the Netherlands more than three-quarters of the citizens believe that increased competition has positive effects but in Luxembourg, France, Germany, Greece and Belgium the view that it has negative effects is significantly higher than the European average.

The single market increased competition in a number of domains such as transport, telecommunication services, banking and insurance services. In general, would you say that this has a ... effect?

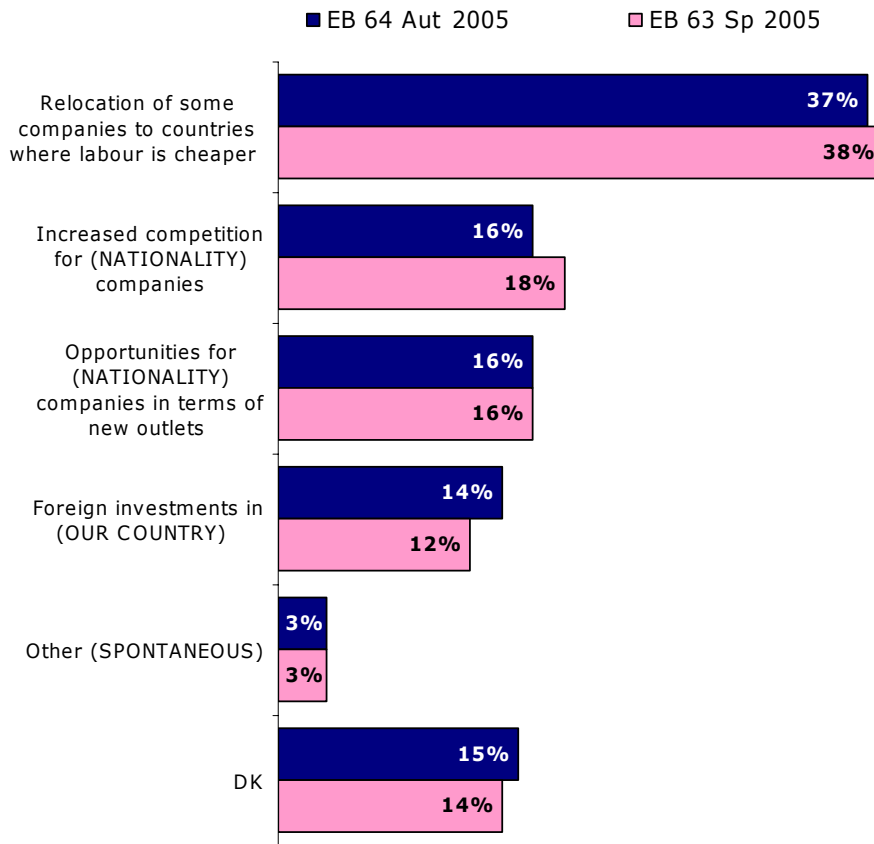

2.3. The perception of the globalisation of trade

When people think of globalisation, increased competition is not the first thing that comes to mind.

- Globalisation is most associated with relocation -

Of the possible consequences of globalisation addressed in this survey, the one that is mentioned the most by citizens is the relocation of certain companies to countries where labour is cheaper. It first comes to the mind of 37% of respondents, a score that is more or less on par with that observed last spring⁷⁶.

There are multiple consequences of the globalisation of trade. When you hear the word "globalisation", what comes first to mind?

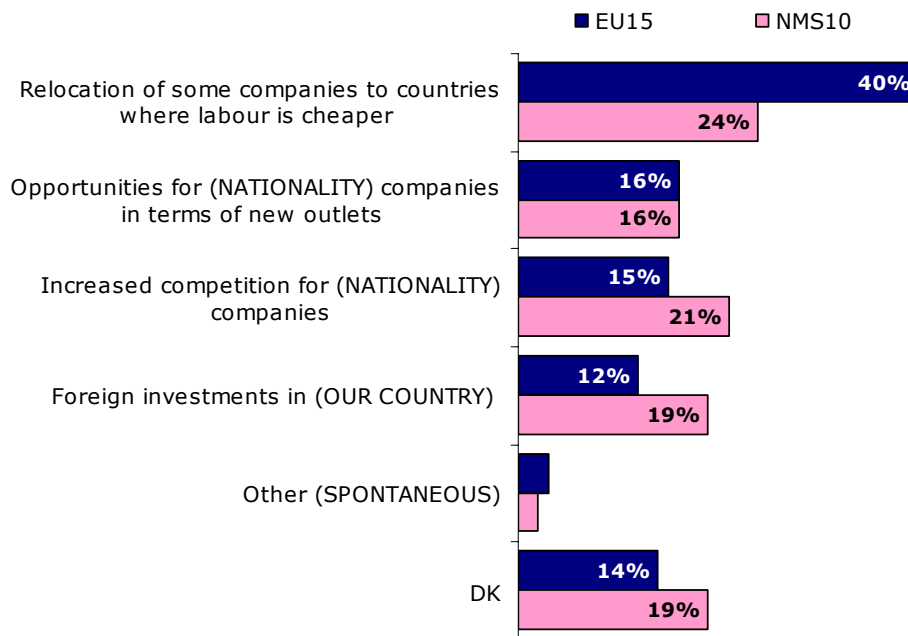

For around one in six European citizens, increased competition for national companies first comes to mind (16%, -2 points).

⁷⁶ QA55. There are multiple consequences of the globalisation of trade. When you hear the word « globalisation », what comes to mind first?

If, overall, the order in which the consequences are listed does not change between the average results observed in the ten new Member States and the fifteen old European Union Member States, their intensity varies quite strongly: relocations obtain the highest score in the old 15 EU Member States (40%), compared with only 24% (-2 points) of the persons interviewed in the new Member States. However, the opposite is true as regards increased competition for national companies: 21% (+1 point) in the ten new Member States compared with 15% (-2 points) for the fifteen old Member States.

There are multiple consequences of the globalisation of trade. When you hear the word "globalisation", what comes first to mind?

An analysis by country reveals the following significant findings:

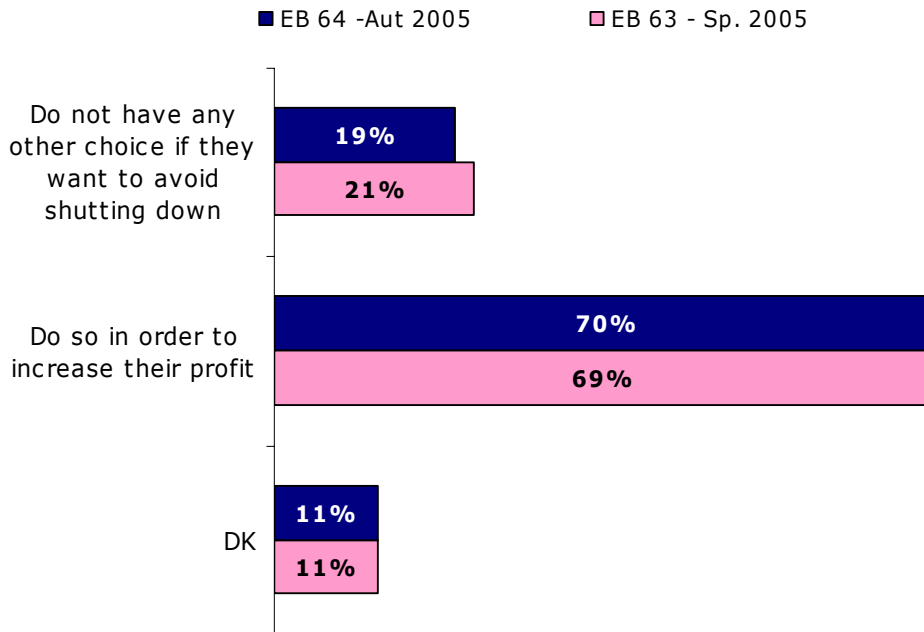

- ◆ Globalisation is associated with the relocation of companies to countries where labour is cheaper by more than half of the people in France (59%), Greece (53%, +4 points), Belgium (52%, -4 points), and Germany (51%). In the Netherlands a very significant increase has been recorded since the previous survey. The view is now held by 30% of the respondents, up from 13% last spring.
- ◆ The view that globalisation means increased competition is particularly widespread in Cyprus (34%, +6 points) and Latvia (32%, +6 points).
- ◆ There is a stronger perception of opportunities in terms of inward foreign investment outside the current EU Member States.
- ◆ The Dutch (31%), Danes (28%) and Swedes (27%) tend more than average (16%) to see globalisation as a source of new openings.
- ◆ The level of 'Don't know' replies is exceptionally high in Bulgaria and Turkey (37% and 42% respectively).

2.4. The reasons why companies relocate

- Companies relocate to increase their profits -

The vast majority of European citizens consider that companies relocate above all to increase their profits (70%). Only 19% of the persons interviewed consider that companies are obliged to relocate if they want to avoid closing down their operations⁷⁷. In comparison to spring 2005, the results have remained stable.

Which of the following two points of view comes closest to yours? In general companies which relocate...

In all the Member States, the suggestion that companies relocate to increase their profits is the majority view. There is some variation in the extent of consensus with the highest levels of support for this view recorded in Finland (83%) and Greece (82%). The proportion of "don't know" replies varies considerably and ranges from 3% in Belgium and Finland to 45% in Turkey.

⁷⁷ QA57. Which of the following two points of view comes closest to yours? In general companies which relocate...

2.5. Protectionism

As the above results indicate, European public opinion is quite critical of globalisation. The Eurobarometer measures to what extent European citizens feel that the European Union protects them of the negative effects of globalisation⁷⁸.

- Citizens feel insufficiently protected against negative effects of globalisation -

On average, just over a third of European citizens agree that the European Union protects them of the negative effects of globalisation (34%) but the majority (47%) disagrees. One respondent in five lacks an opinion.

Views vary to a certain degree, depending on people's socio-demographic characteristics. The largest degree of variation is found for:

- ♦ Education: the longer people have stayed in full-time education the more likely they are to hold an opinion.
- ♦ Age: the younger people are the more likely they are to agree with the statement.

15	29%	41%
16-19	33%	49%
20+	38%	52%

However, far larger cleavages in opinion are found depending on how people perceive the European Union in general:

- ♦ Image of the EU: 47% of people who have a positive image of the European Union agree with the statement, compared to only 15% of people who have a negative image of the European Union.
- ♦ Trust in the EU: 46% of people who trust the European Union agree it protects them of the negative effects of globalisation, compared to 24% of people who tend not to trust the European Union.

Analysis of the national results show that at 63%, people in Germany are most critical of the European Union's ability to protect its citizens against the negative effects of globalisation. In Malta, Cyprus, Ireland, Estonia, Spain and Lithuania and equally in Romania, Turkey and Bulgaria people who feel the European Union protects them against the negative effects of globalisation outnumber those who disagree.

CONCLUSIONS

This Standard Eurobarometer survey was carried out in autumn 2005, following a difficult period in the history of the European Union. The months preceding the survey were marked by the negative outcome of the referenda on the European Constitution in France and the Netherlands, putting the ratification process on hold. In the weeks just prior to the survey, the debate on the EU budget dominated the headlines. The survey provides an overview of public opinion in the aftermath of this eventful period.

- ◆ The events of the past six months do not appear to have had a direct impact on the confidence citizens have in the European Union in general with 45% of respondents indicating that they trust the European Union, compared to 44% in spring 2005. At the same time, the results reveal a more critical stance towards the European institutions marked by a slight increase in the percentage of people who say they tend not to trust the Commission and the Parliament.
- ◆ A more critical opinion is also apparent from the slight drop that has been recorded since spring 2005 for the three main indicators covering the general attitude towards the European Union. Support for EU membership now stands at 50% (-4 points), the score for the perceived benefits of membership is 52% (-3 points) and the European Union's image is positive according to 44% of its citizens (-3 points).
- ◆ In terms of support for the Union's current policies, the survey shows a slightly more critical stance regarding attitudes towards further enlargement. Support for the two other main policies of the European Union, the European Security and Defence Policy and the European Common Foreign Policy remains solid.
- ◆ The debate on the European Constitution has not resulted in a rejection of the idea of a shared constitution but, on the contrary, the support of the concept of a constitution for the EU has intensified. Furthermore, the majority of European citizens (60%) are of the view that the Union needs a Constitution both for its internal functioning and its role and position in the outside world.
- ◆ Moreover, the majority of European Union citizens consider that adopting the European Constitution will make the way in which the European Union works more democratic, efficient and transparent.
- ◆ The Union's current period of reflection is in line with public opinion concerning the perceived and desired speed of the building of Europe. The perceived speed at which Europe is developing is slower than in previous years and the desire for a faster Europe is less pronounced than it has been in the past.
- ◆ Further evidence in this regard is obtained from the finding that support for the development towards a European political union has fallen slightly though the majority of citizens are still in favour (55%, -3 points).
- ◆ The survey shows that there is widespread desire among European citizens for more information about the European Union. Furthermore, the public appears receptive to the intentions of the European Union to interact more with European Union citizens. At the moment, only around a quarter of citizens feel involved in European affairs (26%), while 47% say they would like to be more involved.

- ◆ These findings are particularly relevant when one considers that close to six out of ten European citizens feel that their voice does not count in the European Union and that this sentiment has increased considerably since last spring (59%, +6 points).
- ◆ This is all the more poignant considering that European citizens have clear concerns. Despite increased confidence in the economy and a generally more upbeat mood in terms of future expectations, they continue to worry in particular about unemployment and the economic situation. These concerns top the list in terms of which actions European citizens want the European Union to follow in priority.
- ◆ To improve the European Union's economic performance, the vast majority of citizens are counting on a knowledge-based economy, giving priority to the improvement of education, and training, investment in research and innovation, which they see as the key levers for improving Europe's competitiveness in an increasingly global economy.
- ◆ Notwithstanding these concerns and challenges, European citizens acknowledge the advantages of living in Europe: in comparison to the United States, Europe is seen to be ahead in terms of protection of the environment, education, the combat against all forms of inequalities and discrimination, as well as in the fight against unemployment.

EUROBAROMETER « STANDARD » 64 TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS

Between the 11th of October and the 15th of November 2005, TNS Opinion & Social, a consortium created between Taylor Nelson Sofres and EOS Gallup Europe, carried out wave 64.2 of the EUROBAROMETER, on request of the EUROPEAN COMMISSION, Directorate-General Communication, Opinion Polls.

The EUROBAROMETER SPECIAL « STANDARD » is part of wave 64.2 and covers the population of the respective nationalities of the European Union Member States, resident in each of the Member States and aged 15 years and over. The EUROBAROMETER 64.2 has also been conducted in the two acceding countries (Bulgaria and Romania) and in the two candidate countries (Croatia and Turkey) and in the Turkish Cypriot Community. In these countries, the survey covers the national population of citizens of the respective nationalities and the population of citizens of all the European Union Member States that are residents in those countries and have a sufficient command of one of the respective national language(s) to answer the questionnaire. The basic sample design applied in all states is a multi-stage, random (probability) one. In each country, a number of sampling points was drawn with probability proportional to population size (for a total coverage of the country) and to population density.

In order to do so, the sampling points were drawn systematically from each of the "administrative regional units", after stratification by individual unit and type of area. They thus represent the whole territory of the countries surveyed according to the EUROSTAT NUTS II (or equivalent) and according to the distribution of the resident population of the respective nationalities in terms of metropolitan, urban and rural areas. In each of the selected sampling points, a starting address was drawn, at random. Further addresses (every Nth address) were selected by standard "random route" procedures, from the initial address. In each household, the respondent was drawn, at random (following the "closest birthday rule"). All interviews were conducted face-to-face in people's homes and in the appropriate national language. As far as the data capture is concerned, CAPI (Computer Assisted Personal Interview) was used in those countries where this technique was available.

For each country a comparison between the sample and the universe was carried out. The Universe description was derived from Eurostat population data or from national statistics offices. For all countries surveyed, a national weighting procedure, using marginal and intercellular weighting, was carried out based on this Universe description. In all countries, gender, age, region and size of locality were introduced in the iteration procedure. For international weighting (i.e. EU averages), TNS Opinion & Social applies the official population figures as provided by EUROSTAT or national statistic offices. The total population figures for input in this post-weighting procedure are listed above.

Readers are reminded that survey results are estimations, the accuracy of which, everything being equal, rests upon the sample size and upon the observed percentage. With samples of about 1,000 interviews, the real percentages vary within the following confidence limits:
