INTRODUCTION

This standard Eurobarometer was carried out between 25 March and 4 May 2008. This wave of the standard Eurobarometer was conducted in 31 countries and territories: the 27 Member States of the European Union, the three candidate countries (Croatia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Turkey) and the Turkish Cypriot Community in the area of the island not controlled by the government of the Republic of Cyprus.

The results of the Eurobarometer 69 (spring 2008) must be analysed in the context of the current global economic crisis which has an adverse impact on European growth and therefore on the everyday life of the European Union's citizens. This negative trend, which was perceptible at the time of the Eurobarometer 68 wave, seems to have intensified: we now note the existence of an "economic ill-being factor" in European public opinion, whereas one year ago, at a time of buoyant European economic growth, we spoke of an "economic well-being factor".

European public opinion has therefore changed considerably over a period of one year, with a certain euphoria giving way to a depressed climate. The American economic crisis, due chiefly to the credit market crisis and the constant increases in oil and commodity prices, is having a lasting impact on European economic activity and Europeans are today paying a heavy price. As a result of the gradual decline in the purchasing power of European households and the uncertainties hanging over financial markets, Europeans are increasingly worried about the future.

Accordingly, the perception that Europeans have of their lives seems to have deteriorated and this Eurobarometer is useful in assessing the scope of this deterioration. We note in this negative context that trust in both national and European institutions has declined, although the latter continue to record better scores.

After having examined the European economic, social and political context in the first volume, we shall now examine in this second volume various aspects of the relationship between the European Union and its citizens. We shall analyse in this report the historical Eurobarometer indicators, such as the extent to which citizens feel attached to the European Union, their support for their country's membership of the European Union and their perception of the way in which their country has benefited from its membership. We shall also examine the way in which European citizens perceive democracy in the European Union and in the various Member States, trust in national and European institutions, the European Union's image and the transparency of the European institutions. Finally, we shall examine how much citizens know about how the European Union works.

This Eurobarometer survey was commissioned by the European Commission's Directorate-General Communication and was carried out by TNS Opinion & Social. The methodology used is that of the Standard Eurobarometer surveys of the Directorate-General Communication ("Research and Political Analysis" Unit). A technical note concerning the interviews conducted by the institutes of the TNS Opinion & Social network is annexed to this report. This specifies the methods used for the interviews and the confidence intervals.

The general analysis and the socio-demographic analysis are based on the results of the EU27, that is to say the average of the results of the twenty-seven Member States. This average is weighted according to the actual population of each Member State.

In this report, we shall analyse the results and changes at two levels: on the one hand, the average for the twenty seven Member States (EU27) and, on the other hand, the averages at national level. The averages for previous years represent the results obtained for all the Member States of the European Union, as it was composed at the time the surveys were conducted. We shall also add brief comments on the way in which answers vary by certain socio-demographic characteristics of the respondents (gender, age, etc.), as well as some other indicators, such as the way citizens perceive the European Union's image, whether they trust the European Union, their knowledge of European Union and their political leanings.

It should be remembered that there are three kinds of report for the Eurobarometer. The report entitled "First Results" examines trend indicators and a selection of new subjects intended to give a rapid operational overview of European public opinion on key issues. Secondly, this full report (composed of several volumes) analyses in-depth all the answers to the questions asked in a standard Eurobarometer wave. For this wave, this full report has been divided into five different reports: the three "standard" volumes which focus on the Eurobarometer's historical indicators, the report on the values of Europeans and the report on European citizens and globalisation. Finally, the national reports are produced in the national language(s) of the country concerned. They focus more on comparisons between the national results and the European Union average. All these reports are published on the European Commission's "Public Opinion" Internet site.

The European Union's "Public Opinion" Internet site can be consulted at the following address

*We wish to thank the people interviewed who gave their time to take part in this survey.
Without their active participation, this study would not have been possible.*

Note

This standard Eurobarometer was carried out between 25 March and 4 May 2008 (no 69) and is part of the Eurobarometer wave 69.2.

In this report, the countries are referred to by their official abbreviation.

* Cyprus as a whole is one of the twenty seven European Union Member States. However, the "acquis communautaire" has been suspended in the part of the country which is not controlled by the government of the Republic of Cyprus. For practical reasons, only the interviews carried out in the part of the country controlled by the government of the Republic of Cyprus are included in the "CY" category and in the EU27 average. The interviews carried out in the part of the country that is not controlled by the government of the Republic of Cyprus are included in the "CY(tcc)" (tcc: Turkish Cypriot Community) category.

 MK is a provisional abbreviation which does not prejudge the definitive name of this country, which will be agreed once the current negotiations at the United Nations have been completed.

IV. THE EUROPEAN UNION AND ITS CITIZENS

We shall examine various aspects of the relationship between the European Union and its citizens. This section addresses the following subjects:

1) Attachment to the European Union: the meaning of the European Union, support for membership of the European Union and the perceived benefits of membership.

2) Democracy in the European Union: the way in which citizens perceive democracy within the European Union and the Member States.

3) The European institutions: how knowledgeable citizens are about the European institutions, the extent to which they trust these institutions and the reasons why they trust or distrust them, the European Union's image and the perceived transparency of the European institutions.

4) The way in which the European Union works: how knowledgeable citizens are about the way the European Union works and about the (current and next) Presidency of the Council of the European Union.

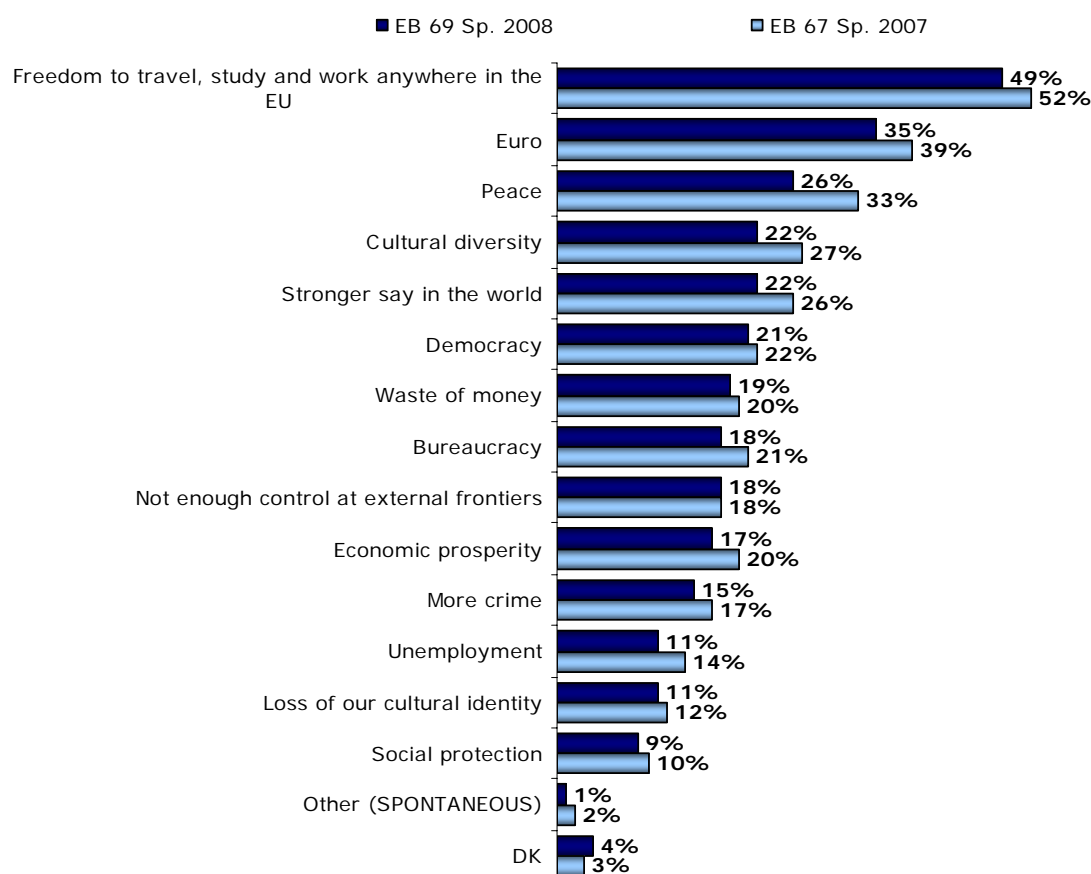

1. Attachment to the European Union

1.1 What the European Union mean to citizens

- Freedom to travel, study and work anywhere in the twenty seven Member States, the single currency and peace are the three elements which best represent the European Union in the eyes of its citizens -

For almost half of Europeans, the European Union represents above all the freedom to travel, study and work anywhere in the twenty seven Member States (49%). Three quarters of Cypriots (75%) and 73% of Estonians, seven out of ten Slovaks (70%) as well as two thirds of Scandinavians (67% of Swedes and 66% of Danes) share this opinion. The euro was the second most frequently mentioned item (35%); it was mentioned far more frequently by respondents in euro zone countries (42%) than in the other Member States (22%).

QA14 What does the European Union mean to you personally?
- EU%

Just over a quarter of the people polled mentioned peace (26%), including 47% of respondents in Cyprus, 46% in Denmark, 43% in Luxembourg, 41% in Sweden and Germany, and 39% in Belgium and Greece.

For more than two out of ten Europeans, the European Union represents cultural diversity and having a stronger say in the world (22% in both cases), and democracy (21%).

17% of Europeans highlighted economic prosperity (including 37% of Slovaks, 36% of Romanians and 31% of respondents in Ireland and Belgium).

The negative connotations were mentioned by fewer than a fifth of Europeans: waste of money was mentioned by 19% (including 44% of Austrians and 37% of Germans), bureaucracy and not enough external border controls were mentioned by 18% of respondents (40% of Latvians, 38% of Danes, 37% of Swedes, 36% of Germans and Austrians and 34% of Finns mentioned bureaucracy; 37% of Danes and 30% of Germans also mentioned the lack of border controls), and finally, 15% of respondents mentioned more crime (40% of Austrians, 36% of Cypriots, 34% of respondents in Luxembourg and 32% of Germans).

While the freedom to travel, study and work anywhere in the European Union is also what best represents the European Union in the eyes of the respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (60%) and Croatia (42%), respondents in Turkey put economic prosperity first (37%). Respondents in Turkey put the freedom to travel, study and work anywhere in the European Union in joint second place with democracy (22%). Croats put peace in second place (24%). Respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia put economic prosperity in second place (50%); this represents the highest score for this item in all the countries that participated in the survey. It should be noted that, as in Croatia, a large number of respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia mentioned peace (42% - in third place).

The scores recorded are all lower than those recorded in spring 2007. Peace has lost 7 percentage points, cultural diversity 5 percentage points and, finally, the euro and "a greater say in the world" 4 percentage points. However, we cannot deduce that this general decline is the result of the pervading gloom linked to the economic outlook: the scores for the negative connotations are also lower in comparison with EB67.

From a socio-demographic point of view, there are significant differences in what the EU means to respondents depending on their age and occupation (see the table on the next page).

The youngest respondents are more likely to mention the freedom to travel, study and work anywhere in the European Union (55% of those in the 15-24 age group compared with 42% of those aged 55 or over) and the euro (38% versus 31%). The oldest respondents are more likely to mention the negative aspects. A fifth of them highlighted bureaucracy (22% of those aged 40-54 and 20% of those aged 55 or over, compared with 10% of those in the 15-24 age group), the waste of money (23% versus 13%), more crime (19% versus 9%) and the lack of border controls (21% versus 12%).

Six out of ten managers (59%, versus 48% of manual workers and 53% of white collar workers) consider that the freedom to travel, study and work anywhere in the European Union is the most representative aspect of the 27 EU Member States and a third of them (35% versus 20% of manual workers and 27% of white collar workers) think the same as regards cultural diversity.

Respondents on the right of the political spectrum are more likely to mention the lack of border controls (20% versus 16% of those on the left). On the other hand, respondents on the left of the political spectrum are more likely to mention cultural diversity (27% versus 18% of those on the right).

1.2 Membership of the European Union

- Support for membership of the European Union has fallen -

More than half of Europeans consider that their country's membership of the European Union is a good thing (52%), while three out of ten (29%) think that it is neither good nor bad and 14% think that it is a bad thing. The proportion of positive opinions has fallen by 6 percentage points since autumn 2007; however, the autumn 2007 result was a record for this indicator.

Respondents in the Netherlands (75%), Luxembourg and Ireland (73% in both cases), two thirds of Belgians (66%), Poles, Spaniards and Danes (65% each) and Romanians (64%) are the most enthusiastic. The majority of respondents in Latvia (52%) are unable to decide whether their country's membership of the European Union is a good thing or a bad thing. Austrians are also greatly divided on this question, a third of them (36%) considering it to be a good thing, while for a similar proportion it is neither good nor bad. Other than Austria, the countries where respondents are the least likely to consider that their country's membership is a good thing are Italy (39%), Hungary (32%), the United Kingdom (30%) and Latvia (29%). It should be noted that the United Kingdom is the only country where a relative majority of respondents have a negative view of their membership of the European Union (32%).

Among the candidate countries, almost three quarters of respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia are convinced that their country's membership of the European Union would be beneficial (72%); half of respondents in Turkey (49%) share their opinion, while Croats are more undecided: 30% think that their country's membership of the European Union would be a good thing, while 39% think that it would be neither good nor bad and a quarter think that it would be a bad thing (25%).

Only three countries recorded an increase in respondents who are positive about their country's membership: Cyprus, Malta and the Czech Republic. In contrast with the general trend observed within the European Union, citizens in these three countries are the only ones who are more optimistic than in autumn 2007 about the economic outlook and employment prospects over the next twelve months.

On the other hand, support for membership of the European Union has fallen fairly sharply in Greece (-15 percentage points), France (-12 percentage points) and Italy (-11 percentage points). In total, support for membership of the European Union has fallen by at least 3 percentage points in eighteen Member States.

A socio-demographic analysis of the results reveals that almost six out of ten men (57%) consider that membership of the European Union is a good thing compared with just under half of the women interviewed (47%). Other differences reflect the respondent's age: whereas 59% of respondents aged under 25 think that membership is a good thing, only 46% of those aged 55 or over share this opinion.

An analysis by the age at which respondents completed their studies reveals greater differences. While only 36% of respondents who left school before the age of 16 believe that membership of the European Union benefits their country, 65% of students and 66% of those who studied beyond the age of 19 share their opinion.

More than six out of ten respondents with a good knowledge of the European Union consider that their country's membership of the EU27 is a good thing (62%), compared with just over one in three respondents who are less knowledgeable (32%). In the same way, eight out of ten Europeans for whom the European Union's image is positive (80%) are convinced of the benefits of their country's membership of the Union, compared with only 10% of those whose perception of the European Union is negative.

Moreover, respondents whose short-term expectations are negative are far more likely to consider membership of the European Union to be a bad thing. There is a link between respondents' short-term expectations regarding the economy and employment and their views on membership of the European Union. Although not the only factor underlying the drop in support for membership of the European Union, it seems obvious that concerns about the economic outlook are having an adverse influence on the indicators measuring support for the Union and in particular the assessment of membership.

QA7 (OUR COUNTRY)'s membership is...	A good thing	52%	69%	57%	43%	67%	54%	43%
	A bad thing	14%	8%	9%	21%	7%	11%	21%
	Neither good nor bad	29%	21%	30%	32%	23%	30%	31%

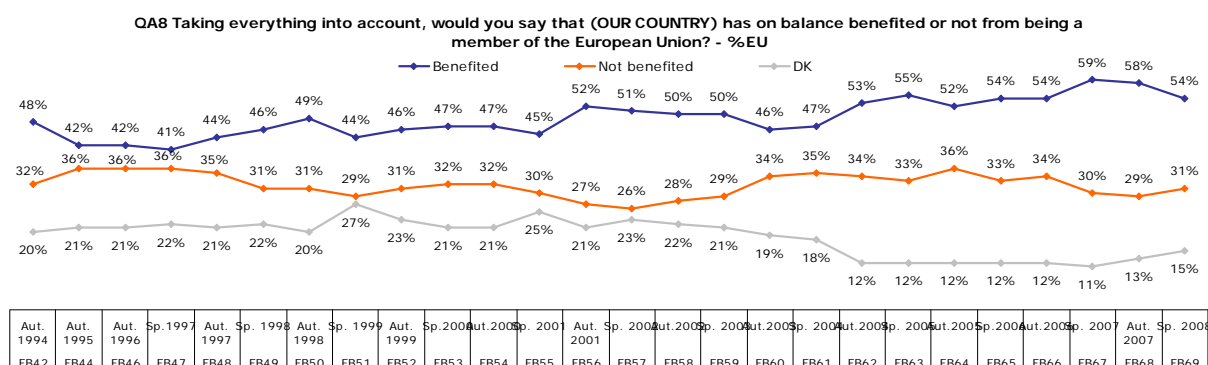

In reading the above table from top to bottom, we note that the respondents who are positive about the economy and the employment situation in their country ("better" columns), are far more likely to consider that their country's membership of the European Union is a good thing than those who think that the situation in these areas is likely to deteriorate in their country (69% compared with 43% for the economic situation and 67% versus 43% for employment).

Similarly, it is also possible to deduce that the Europeans who consider that the employment situation in their country is likely to deteriorate over the coming year are far more likely to think that their country's membership of the European Union is a bad thing.

1.3 The benefits of membership of the European Union

- The number of citizens who believe that their country has benefited from its membership of the European Union has also declined -

A majority of Europeans are convinced that their country's membership of the European Union is a good thing and a large proportion of them also consider that their country has benefited from its membership (54%). However, this proportion is 5 percentage points lower than in spring 2007 which, it will be recalled, was a particularly favourable wave for most of the indicators measuring support for the European Union. The spring 2008 results are at the level of those recorded in autumn 2006¹.

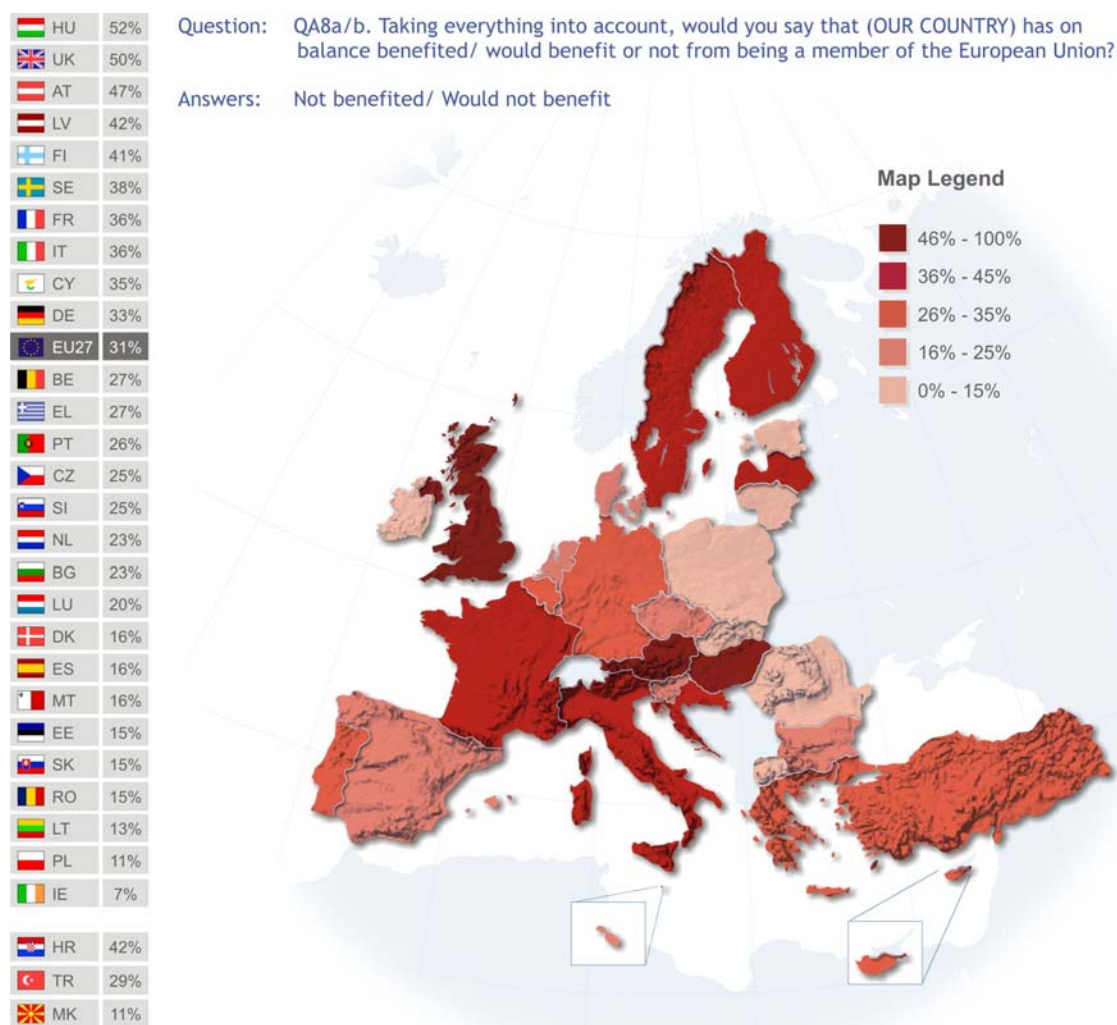

Support for the benefits of membership is the strongest in Ireland (82%), Denmark (77%), Poland (77%), Estonia and Slovakia (both 76%), Lithuania (75%), Greece (73%) and Slovenia (71%).

¹ QA8a Taking everything into account, would you say that (OUR COUNTRY) has on balance benefited or not from being a member of the European Union?

More than half of Hungarians (52%) consider that their country has not benefited from its membership of the European Union. This view is shared by a majority of respondents in the United Kingdom (50%) and by 47% of Austrians. In these three countries, this opinion is held by a majority of respondents. Some 42% of Latvians and 41% of Finns agree.

Contrasting results were recorded in the candidate countries: a small majority of Croats consider that their country would not benefit from membership of the European Union (44% versus 42% who take the opposite view). Respondents in Turkey are more confident about the benefits of their country's proposed future membership of the European Union, 58% of them thinking that it would be beneficial. Finally, respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia are enthusiastic, with more than eight out of ten (82%) considering that their country would benefit from becoming a member of the European Union.

In terms of changes since the previous wave (EB68, autumn 2007), there are significant variations between the Member States. In total, the percentage of favourable opinions has fallen in 19 countries. Thus, the percentage of respondents who consider that their country has benefited from membership of the European Union has fallen, since autumn 2007, by 10 percentage points in Italy, 9 percentage points in Latvia, 8 percentage points in France and Portugal, 7 percentage points in Greece and 6 percentage points in Lithuania, Austria, Hungary and Poland. However, the biggest change since autumn 2007 concerns favourable opinions: these have increased by 18 percentage points in Cyprus, as well as by 6 percentage points in Slovakia and 5 percentage points in Malta.

The strong increase in favourable opinions in Cyprus and, to a lesser extent, in Malta, reflects the previously noted confidence of inhabitants of those countries in the future (increase of 13 percentage points in their positive expectations regarding their personal future in Cyprus and 6 percentage points in Malta, the level of confidence in both states being above the European Union average).

Similarly, changes in the positive item "has benefited/would benefit" are frequently accompanied by changes in the negative item: Greece and Latvia (+10), and Bulgaria (+9) are the countries where the feeling that the country has not benefited from its membership has increased the most. The biggest fall is in Cyprus (-17 percentage points).

The divide between the countries where public opinion has become more favourable and those where it has become more negative replicates once again the pattern of short-term economic expectations at national level.

Men (59% versus 50% of women), managers (66% compared with 52% of manual workers and 59% of other white collar workers), the youngest respondents (64% of those aged 15 to 24 compared with 47% of those aged 55 or over) and those who studied the longest (68% of those who studied beyond the age of 19 compared with 39% of those who left school before the age of 16) are the most convinced that their country's membership of the European Union is a good thing and, logically, that their country has benefited from it.

A very large proportion of the respondents for whom the European Union conjures up a positive image also consider that their country has benefited from its membership (80% versus 12% of those for whom it has a negative image), as do two thirds of the people who are very knowledgeable about how the European Union works (64% versus 36% of those who are less knowledgeable).

1.4 The reasons why citizens consider that they benefit from their country's membership of the European Union

- Improved cooperation between their country and other countries, peace and increased security, and economic growth are the main reasons why Europeans believe that their country has benefited from membership of the European Union -

We then endeavoured to ascertain the reasons why Europeans feel that their country has benefited from membership of the European Union (for the candidate countries, why they consider that their country would benefit from membership). This question was therefore only put to respondents who consider that their country has benefited/would benefit from being a member of the European Union. Similarly, we asked respondents who are critical of the benefits of membership the reason for their scepticism.

Basis: Respondents who consider that their country has benefited from being a member of the EU

Improved cooperation between their country and other countries (37%), maintaining peace and strengthening security (32%) and economic growth (30%) are the main reasons why Europeans consider that their country has benefited from its membership of the European Union.

Two thirds of respondents in the Netherlands (65%) and more than six out of ten Scandinavians (64% of Danes and 62% of Swedes) mentioned improved cooperation between their country and other countries.

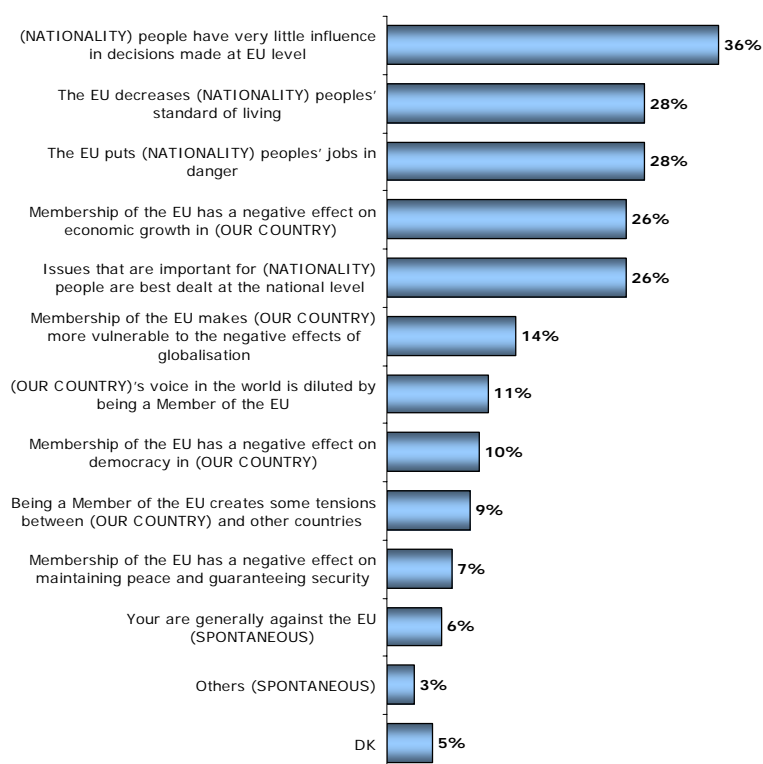

A quarter of the people polled highlighted the fact that the European Union provides new employment opportunities; this was mentioned in particular by citizens in several of the Member States that joined the European Union on 1 May 2004 (54% of Slovaks, 51% of Poles, 50% of Estonians and 49% of Lithuanians, compared with a European Union average of 25%). More than one in five respondents mentioned the fact that the European Union gives their country a stronger say in the world, including more than a third of respondents in France (35%), Luxembourg and Belgium (34% each).

Respondents in the candidate countries are unanimous in mentioning economic growth as the main benefit that their country would obtain from membership of the European Union (59% of the people polled in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, 57% of Turks and 38% of Croats).

The respondents who consider that their country has not benefited from membership of the European Union gave the fact that their country has very little influence in decisions taken at EU level (36%) as their main reason. The next most frequently mentioned reasons were that the EU reduces the standard of living of citizens and that it puts jobs at risk (28% in both cases).

A quarter of the people polled also said that membership of the European Union has an adverse impact on economic growth in their country and that important issues are best dealt with at national level (26% in both cases).

QA10 Which of the following are the main reasons for thinking that (OUR COUNTRY) did not benefit from being a member of the European Union? - %EU

Basis: Those who declared that their country has not benefited from being a member of the EU

Just under two thirds of Scandinavians believe that their country has little influence over decisions taken at EU level (65% of Swedes and 63% of Danes), while half of respondents in France and Slovenia mentioned a drop in standards of living (52% and 49% respectively). Six out of ten Cypriots (59%) and half of respondents in Luxembourg (50%) mentioned the threat to jobs.

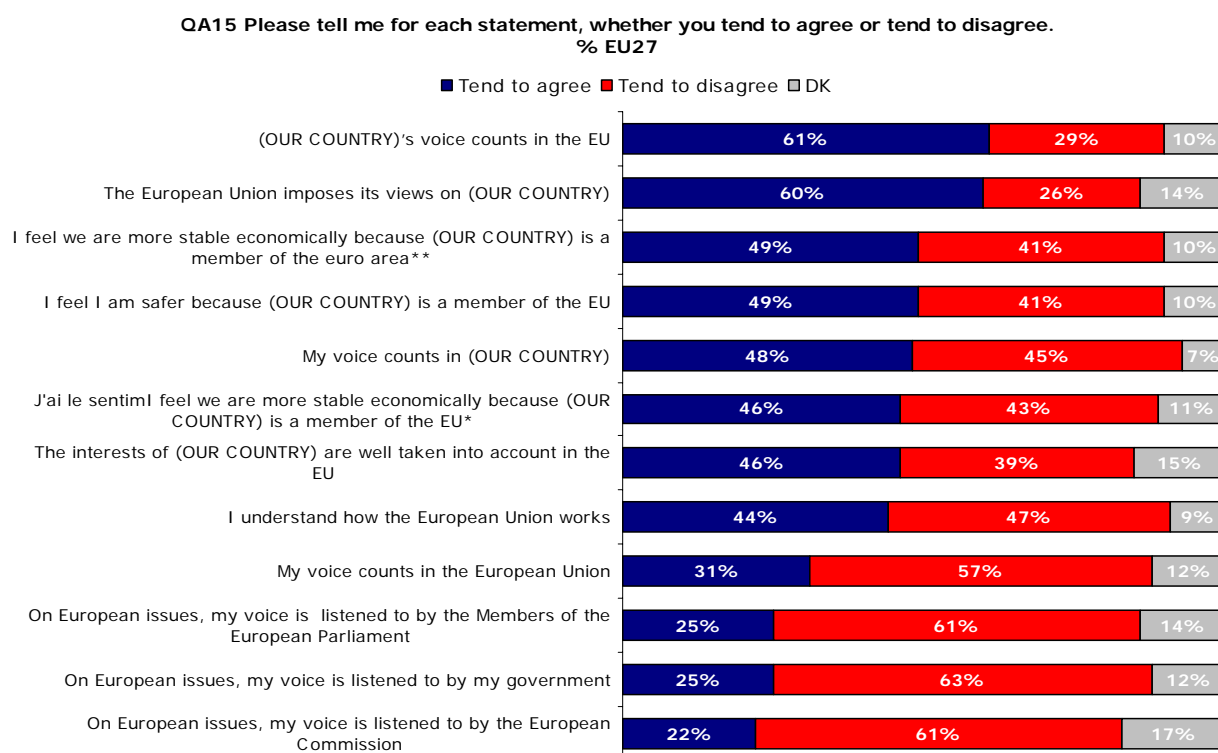

Like citizens of the twenty seven EU Member States, Croats and respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia highlighted reduced standards of living (48% and 33% respectively). On the other hand, the Turks who consider that their country would not benefit from membership of the European Union were most likely to state spontaneously that they were in general against the European Union (30%).

2. Democracy in the European Union

- A clear majority of Europeans consider that their voice counts in the European Union -

More than six out of ten Europeans consider that their country's voice counts in the European Union (61%). A majority of Europeans also consider that they are safer because their country is a member of the European Union (49% versus 41% who disagree), that their voice counts in their country (48% versus 45%), that the interests of their country are taken into account in the European Union (46% versus 39% who disagree) and that they are more stable economically because their country is a member of the euro zone (49% of respondents in euro zone countries) or of the European Union (46% of the non-euro zone countries).

As can be seen, these results provide an additional insight into the reasons why some Europeans consider that their country has benefited from membership.

*Question only asked in the EU27 but not in the EURO ZONE

Question only asked in the EURO ZONE

More than four out of ten people polled declared that they have a good understanding of how the European Union works (44% versus 47% who take the opposite view), fewer than a third of respondents (31%) consider that their voice counts in the European Union (versus 57%), while a quarter consider that, on European issues, their voice is listened to by the European Parliament (25% versus 61%) and by their government (25% versus 63%). More than a fifth of respondents (22%) consider that, on European issues, their voice is listened to by the European Commission (versus 61% who disagree). It should be noted that that similar proportions of respondents (approximately 6 out of ten) consider that they are not listened to by their national political institutions (the government) or by European political institutions (European Commission and Parliament) on European issues. Notwithstanding the fact that Europeans put more trust in the European Commission and Parliament than in national governments, national and European political institutions are criticised equally for the weight they give to the opinions of citizens on European issues. However, this is fairly logical as the question relates specifically to European issues. Finally, six out of ten people polled consider that the European Union imposes its views on their country: 60% versus a quarter who disagree (26%).

* Question asked in the EU27 but not in the EUROZONE
 Question only asked in the EURO ZONE

The scores for two of the dimensions tested have risen significantly: +8 percentage points for the number of people polled who consider that their country's interests are taken into account in the European Union since autumn 2007 and +4 percentage points for the number of respondents who consider that they understand how the European Union works. There has been a reversal of opinion on the first of these dimensions, with the majority of Europeans now considering that the European Union takes account of their country's interests. In the generally difficult backdrop against which the EB69 wave was conducted, in particular for most of the indicators linked to the European Union, this is a fairly remarkable result which is worth emphasising.

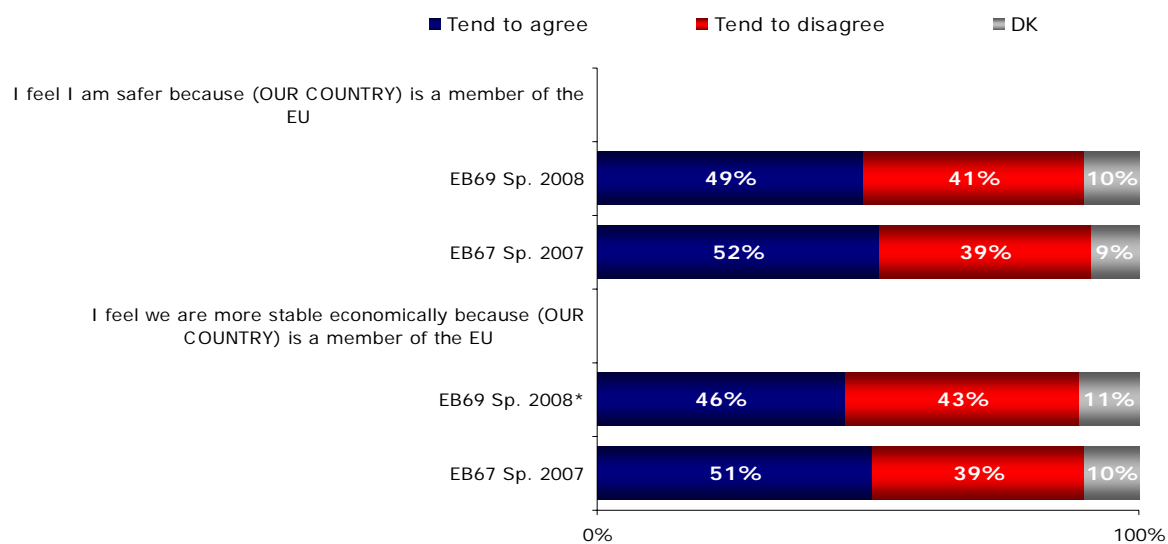

On the other hand, the percentage of Europeans who consider that they are more stable economically as a result of their country's membership of the European Union has fallen by 5 percentage points in the year since spring 2007. The fact that the question was asked this time solely in the non-euro zone countries undoubtedly helps to explain this change.

The proportion of respondents who feel safer because their country is a member of the European Union has fallen by 3 percentage points.

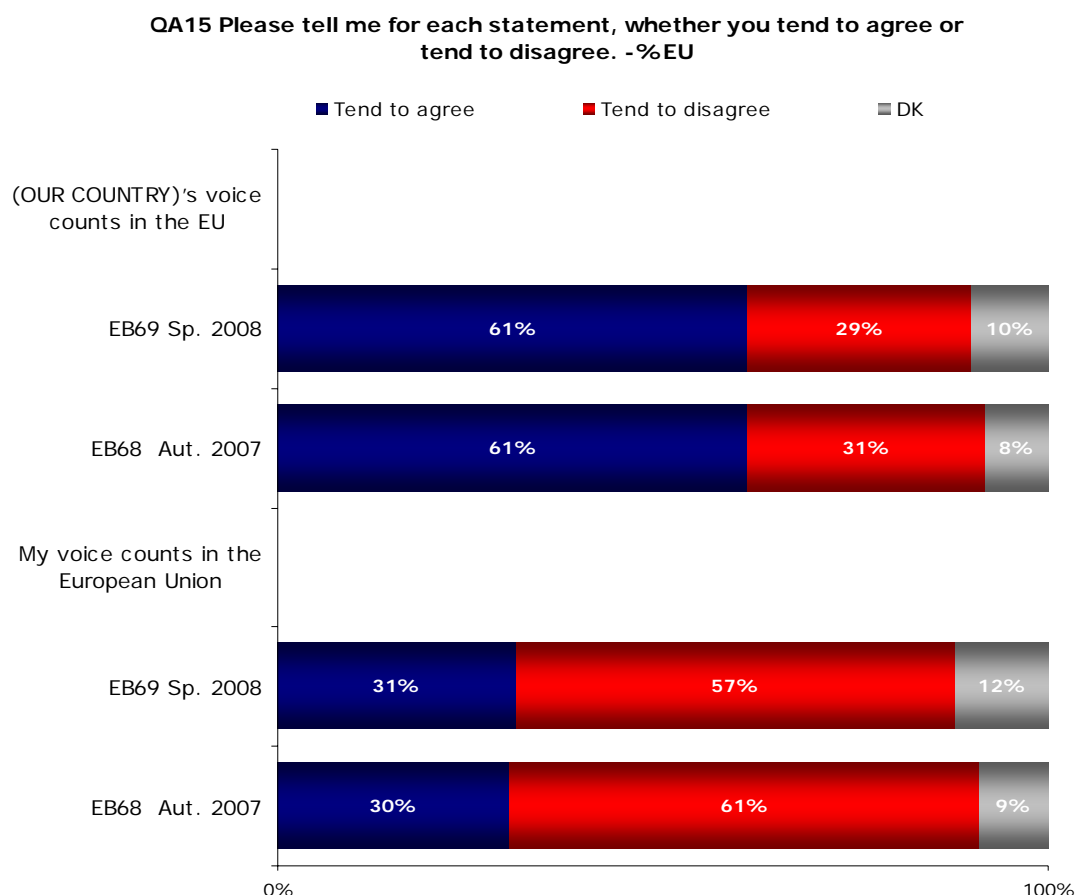

The decline in these indicators is in all likelihood linked to the growing concerns expressed by Europeans about the economy and employment, as well as to the fact that they feel less confident about their personal futures and their professional and financial situations.

QA15 Please tell me for each statement, whether you tend to agree or tend to disagree. -EU %

*This year, item only asked in the countries that are not members of the EURO area

The results for the other dimensions tested, which concern citizens' participation, are relatively stable: the proportion of respondents who consider that their country's voice counts in the European Union is unchanged (61%), while the proportion of those who consider that their voice as a citizen counts in the European Union has fallen by 1 percentage point (31%).

Respondents were tested on the other items for the first time in the Eurobarometer. It will be interesting, in future waves, to measure the changes for these new items, in particular citizens' perceptions of the extent to which their views are taken into account on European Issues by political institutions at national level (the government) and at European level (the European Commission and Parliament). As we have seen, the economic concerns of respondents have a detrimental impact on trust in political institutions in general. It is possible that an upturn in trust in political institutions will lead, in future waves, to an increase in the proportion of Europeans who consider that their views are taken into account on European issues.

The analysis by country reveals some significant differences: more than eight in ten respondents in Sweden (88%), Luxembourg and Denmark (83%) consider that the voice of their country counts in the European Union. This view is shared by 81% of respondents in the Netherlands, 80% in France and Belgium and 78% in Germany. On the other hand, in five of the twenty seven Member States a majority of respondents take the opposite view: the Czech Republic (51% of respondents disagree with the statement that "my country's voice counts in the European Union"), Italy (50%), Latvia (48%), Slovakia (47%) and Austria (46%).

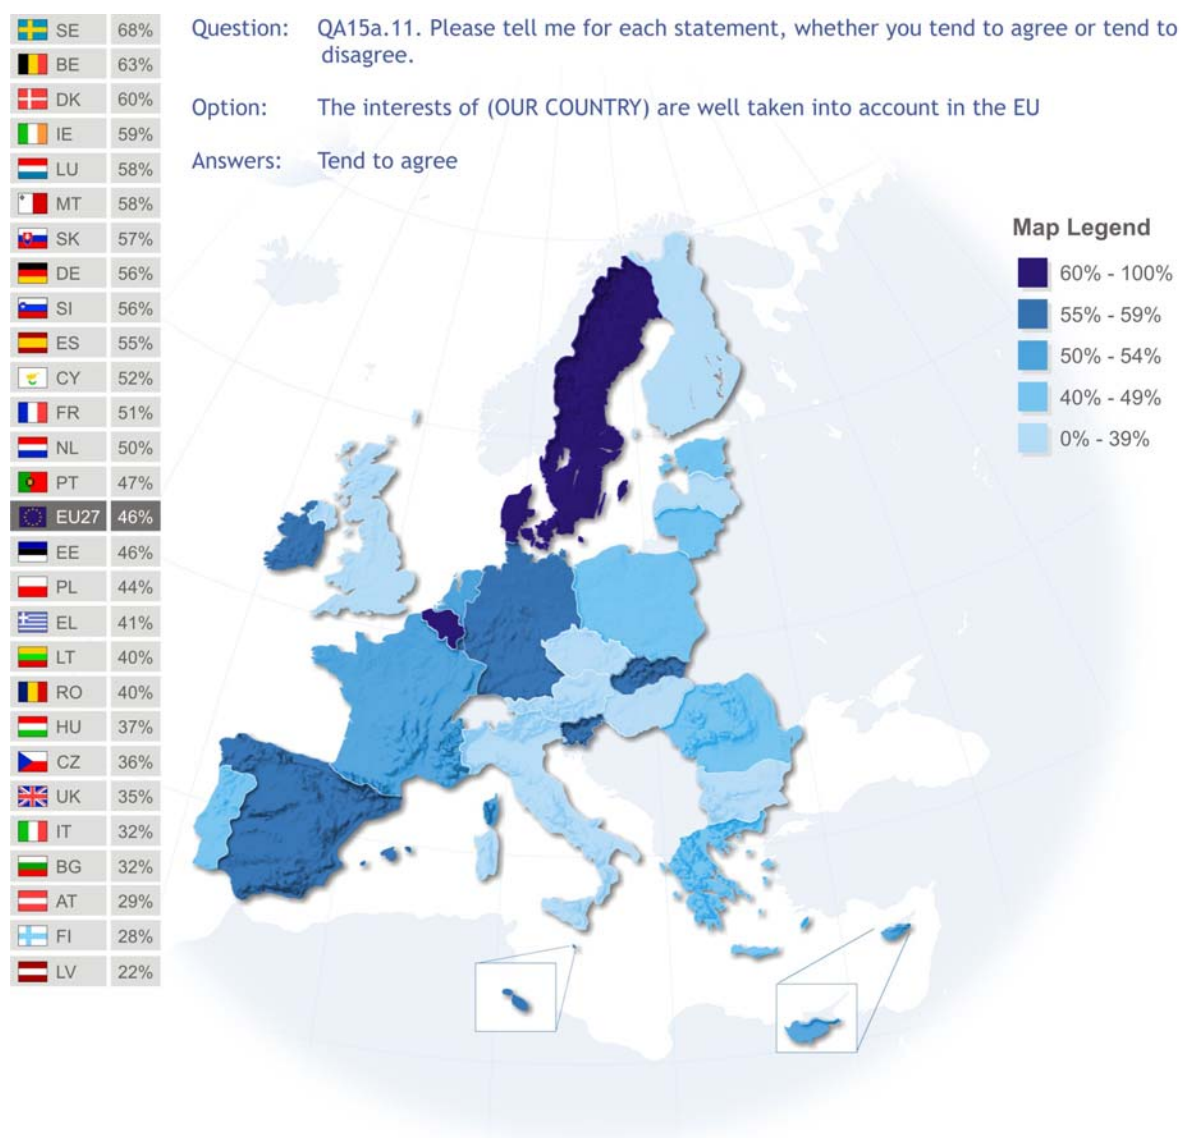

At an individual level, Danes are the most positive, with 50% considering that their voice counts in the European Union. This view is shared by 49% of respondents in Belgium, 48% in Cyprus, 45% in Spain and Malta and 44% in Luxembourg and the Netherlands. However, only 12% of Latvians, 14% of Bulgarians, 16% of Czechs and Italians, 17% of Slovaks and 18% of Romanians expressed a similar view.

Finally, at national level, a very large proportion of Swedes (87%), 79% of Dutch respondents, more than seven out of ten French respondents (72%), 70% of Finns and 69% of respondents in Luxembourg consider that their voice counts in their country. This opinion is held by a minority of respondents in Italy and Latvia (17% in both cases), Bulgaria (18%), Romania (20%) and the Czech Republic (22%).

More than seven out of ten Cypriots (79%), Estonians and Greeks (71%) and almost three quarters of respondents in Malta, Poland and Romania (64% in all three cases) feel safer because their country is a member of the European Union. Only a third of respondents in the United Kingdom (32%), Austria (34%), France (36%) and Sweden (38%) share their opinion.

From an economic point of view, among the countries outside the euro zone almost two thirds of Danes (64%) consider that they are more stable because their country is a member of the European Union, but three quarters of Latvians (73%) disagree. In the euro zone, respondents in Ireland (69%) and Belgium (66%) are the most likely to consider that their country is more stable because of its membership of the European Union. A majority of Italians (51%) take the opposite view.

More than six out of ten Swedes and Belgians (68% and 63% respectively) as well as 60% of Danes consider that their country's interests are taken into account within the European Union. There are significant differences from one Member State to another. Only two out of ten Latvians (22%), 28% of Finns, 29% of Austrians and fewer than a third of Italians and Bulgarians (32%) share their confidence.

Just under two thirds of Cypriots (65%), 62% of Slovenes, six out of ten respondents in Luxembourg and the Netherlands (61%) and 58% of Poles, Belgians and Swedes claim to understand how the European Union works, compared with only a quarter of Italians (26%), 36% of Slovaks, 38% of Czechs and 39% of respondents in the United Kingdom and Romania.

A small minority of Europeans consider that on European issues, their voice is heard by the European institutions (the European Parliament and the Commission). Nevertheless, in three States, a majority of respondents consider that their voice is heard by the European Parliament: in Cyprus (48%), Spain and Malta (42%). Fewer than one in ten Latvians (8%), 10% of respondents in Bulgaria, 15% of Italians and Slovaks and 16% of Lithuanians expressed a similar opinion. A majority of respondents also take this view with regard to the European Commission in Cyprus (44% of respondents consider that their voice is heard on European issues,) and in Malta (39%). Spaniards are more divided on this question: 40% of them consider that their voice is heard, whereas an almost identical proportion (41%) take the opposite view. Respondents in Latvia (8%) and Bulgaria (9%) are the least convinced.

A majority of the people polled consider that on European issues, their voice is not heard by their government, including 83% of the respondents in Latvia, 79% in Hungary, 75% in the United Kingdom and Italy and 73% in Slovakia.

Cypriots are not only the most likely to consider that their voice is heard by the European institutions, they are also the most likely to consider that the European Union imposes its views on their country (84%). This opinion is shared by a large proportion of respondents in Latvia and Greece (79% in both cases) and in Finland (70%). Germans (48%) seem the least affected by this question.

The opinions of respondents in the candidate countries are not very different from those in Member States on this question. Thus, the majority of respondents in these three states consider that their country's voice is not taken into account in the European Union (62% of respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, 57% of Croats and 45% of Turks). More than half of respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (53%) and in Turkey (51%) concur at national level and individually while six out of ten Croats (61%) consider that their voice counts in their country. Half of the latter (50%) state that they understand how the European Union works, as do 44% of inhabitants of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. On the other hand, the majority of Turks (44%) take the opposite view. It will be seen that a significant proportion of respondents – almost three out of ten people polled (27%) – felt unable to express an opinion in Turkey.

Finally, a majority of respondents in each of the three candidate countries consider that the European Union imposes its views on their country. This result may seem logical: it should be remembered that the candidate countries have to satisfy a number of criteria imposed by the twenty seven Member States in order to be eligible to join the European Union.

An analysis of the results by socio-demographic category and by the answers given to the general questions on the European Union reveals significant differences: quite logically, the respondents who are very knowledgeable about the European Union are those who have the best understanding of how it works (57% versus 19% of those whose knowledge is poor). Men (51% versus 38% of women), managers (62% versus 44% of manual workers and 50% of other white collar workers) and 61% of the people polled who studied up to the age of 20 (compared with 28% of those who left school before the age of 16) state that they understand how the European Union works.

It will also be seen that respondents on the left of the political spectrum are again more likely than those on the right to believe that, on European issues, their voice and that of their country are heard by the European Union or by their government and that their country's interests are taken into account. On the other hand, 67% of those on the right consider that the European Union imposes its views on their country and 52% believe that they are more stable economically because their country is a member of the European Union compared with 59% and 48% respectively of those on the left. Almost six out of ten managers (56%) also said that they feel more stable economically because their country is a member of the Union compared with a minority of manual workers (40%), 45% of unemployed people and 50% of white collar workers.

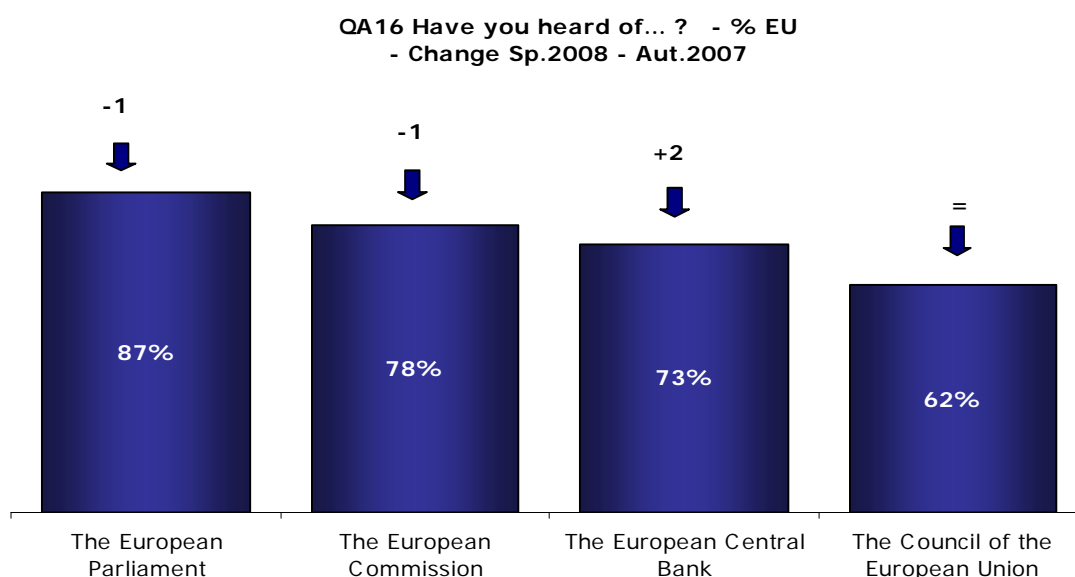

3. The European institutions

3.1 Knowledge of the European institutions

- Knowledge of the European institutions remains stable -

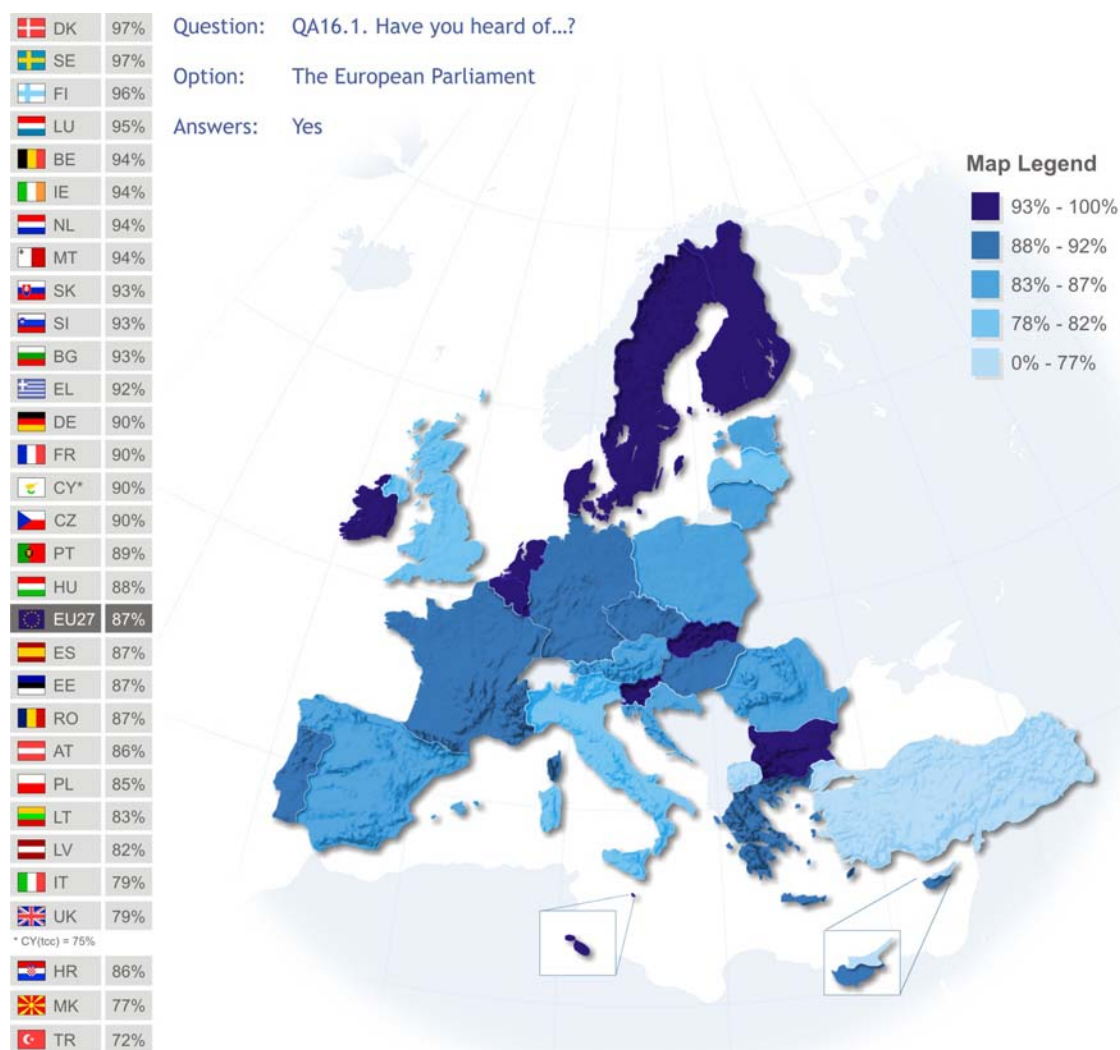

The European Parliament remains the institution with which Europeans are the most familiar: 87% of the people polled have heard of it. It is followed by the European Commission (78%), the European Central Bank (73%) and the Council of the European Union (62%).

These indicators have remained relatively stable since autumn 2007: -1 percentage point for the Parliament, -1 percentage point for the Commission, +2 percentage points for the Central Bank, while the Council's score is unchanged.

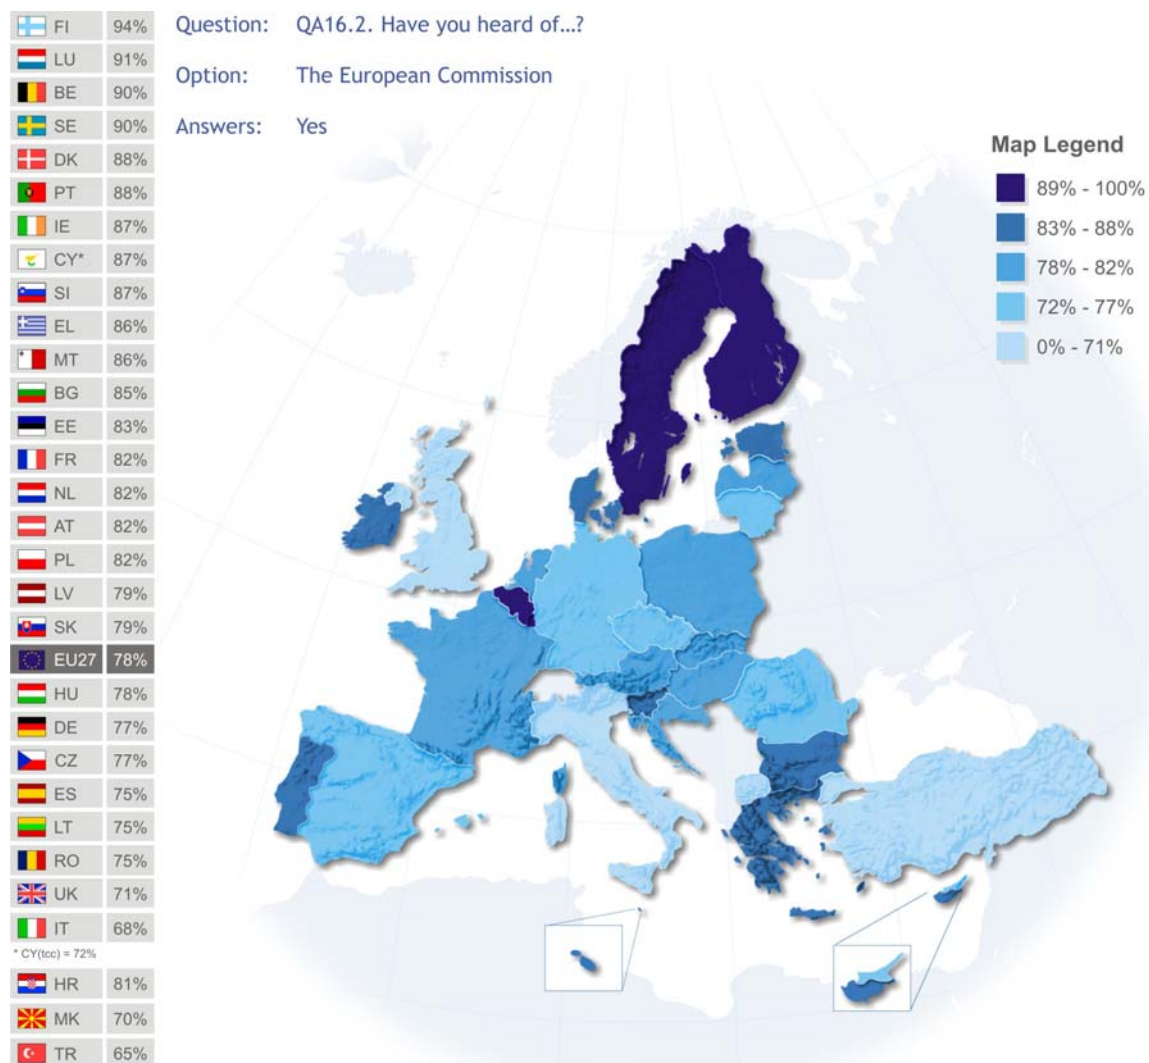

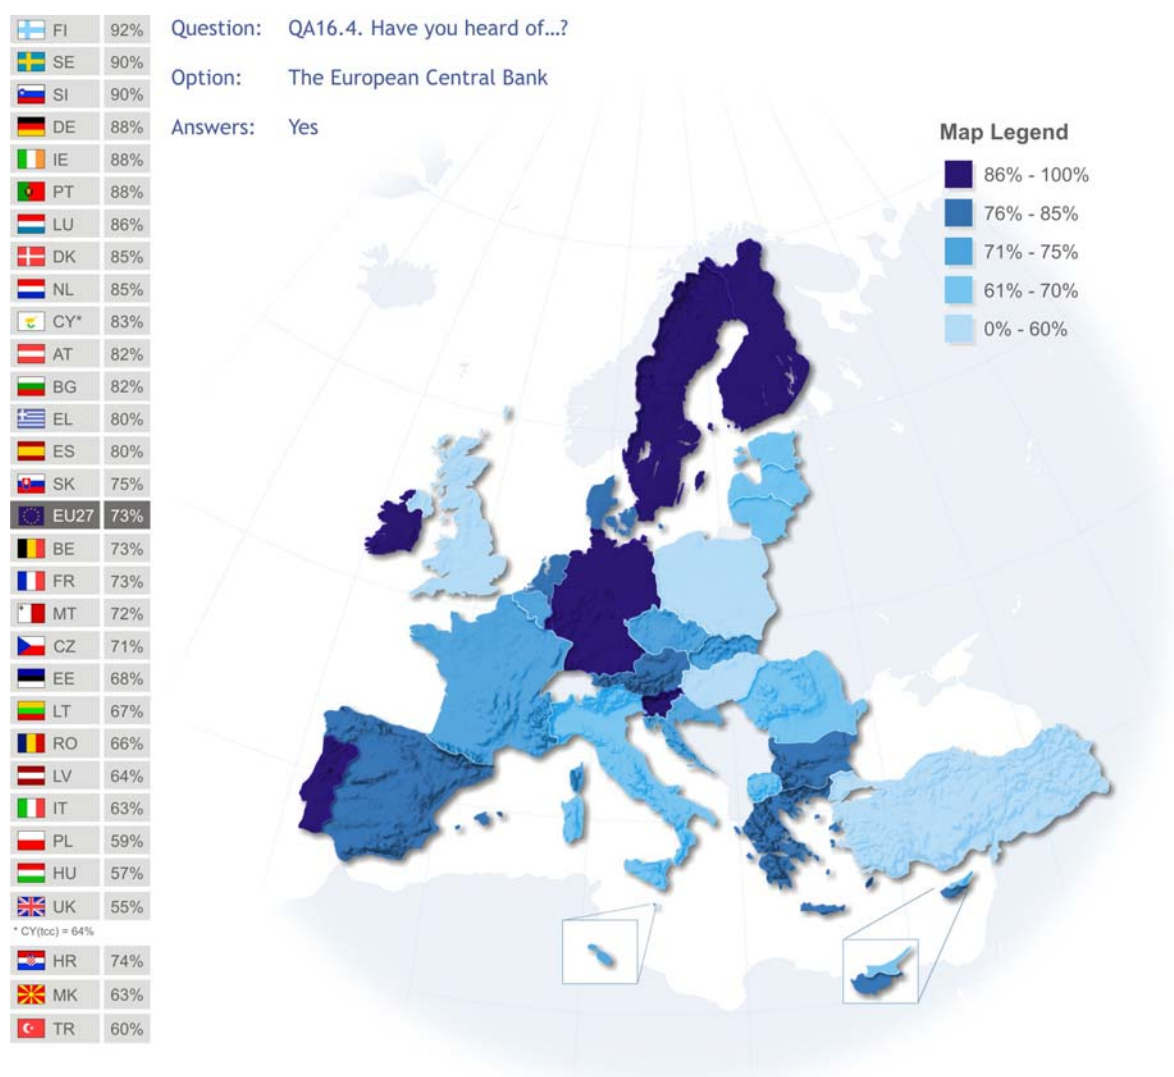

² QA16 Have you heard of ...? – .1 the European Parliament; .2 the European Commission; .3 the Council of the European Union; .4 the European Central Bank

Almost all respondents in the Nordic countries (97% of Swedes and Danes, 96% of Finns) have heard of the European Parliament. In the United Kingdom, two out of ten respondents (20%) stated that they had never heard of the only European institution elected by universal suffrage, as did 17% of Latvians and 16% of Italians. Some 14% of citizens of the Turkish Cypriot Community have never heard of it.

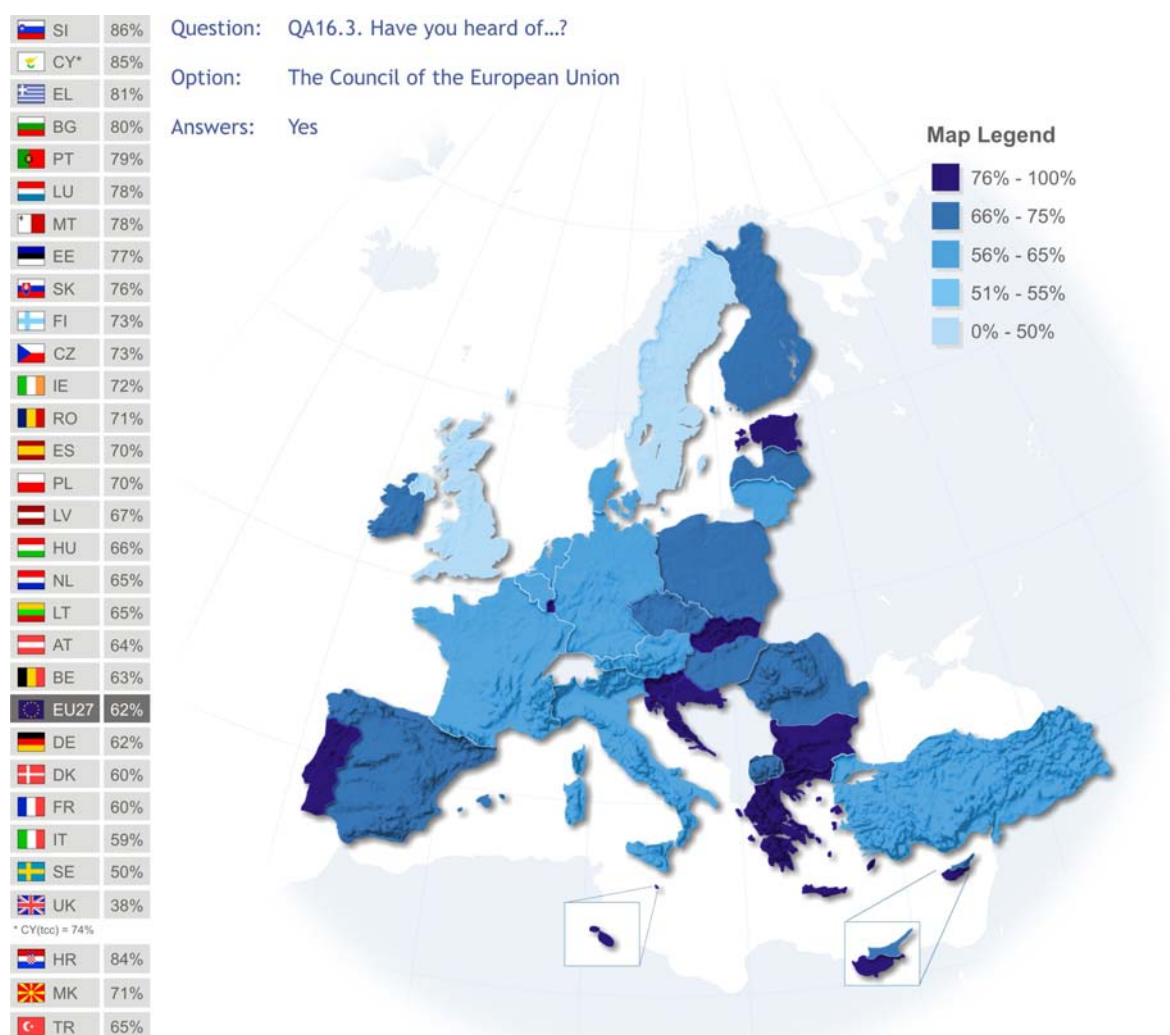

Respondents in Finland (94%), Luxembourg (91%), Belgium and Sweden (90%) are the most likely to have heard of the European Commission. Almost three out of ten respondents in the United Kingdom and Italy (both 27%), and 22% of Lithuanians, Czechs and Spaniards have never heard of it.

Fairly logically, the European Central Bank is well-known among respondents living in the euro zone Member States, with the notable exception of Italy – where fewer than two thirds of respondents have heard of it (63%): 92% of respondents in Finland, 90% in Slovenia, 88% in Germany, Portugal and Ireland, 86% in Luxembourg and 85% in the Netherlands have heard of the ECB. Outside the euro zone, nine out of ten Swedes (90%), 85% of Danes and 82% of Bulgarians have also heard of it. On the other hand, only a little over half of respondents in the United Kingdom (55%) and Hungary (57%) are familiar with this institution.

Finally, more than eight out of ten respondents in Slovenia, Cyprus and Greece (86%, 85% and 81% respectively) and 80% of Bulgarians identified the Council of the European Union while only a minority of respondents in the United Kingdom (38%), half of Swedes (50%) and fewer than six out of ten Italians (59%) could do so.

In general, the proportion of respondents in the United Kingdom who claim to be familiar with the European institutions is still far lower than in the other twenty six Member States. The contrast with Finland, another country which is in general fairly critical of the European Union, is very striking: the level of awareness of Finns regarding all the European institutions is far higher than the European average.

Knowledge of the European institutions in Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia is in line with the EU27 average. On the other hand, Turks are far less familiar with these institutions. A majority of the respondents in the candidate countries, as in the twenty seven Member States, are convinced of the importance of the role played by European institutions. However, respondents in Turkey are again slightly less convinced than the others.

Levels of awareness of the European institutions vary considerably with the respondent's gender, age and level of education: men are again more likely than women to have heard of the European institutions. Likewise, respondents having studied up to the age of 20 or beyond are more familiar with these institutions than those who left school before the age of 16. Finally, levels of awareness increase steadily up to the 40-54 age group before declining.

After examining the extent to which citizens in the twenty seven Member States are familiar with the European institutions, we asked respondents for their views on the importance of the role played by each institution.³

Obviously, the strength of the answers varies with the level of awareness of each of the institutions tested.

Three quarters of EU27 citizens (75%) consider that the European Parliament plays an important role. Nine of ten Greeks and Cypriots (90%), 88% of Slovaks, 87% of respondents in Malta and 85% of respondents in Belgium, the Netherlands and Sweden share this view, compared with just over half of UK respondents (55%).

Two thirds of the people polled consider that the European Commission plays an important role: 88% of Cypriots, 86% of Greeks, and 85% of Belgians compared with only 48% of respondents in the United Kingdom.

More than seven out of ten Europeans also believe this to be true as regards the European Central Bank (71%). Once again, respondents in Cyprus (88%), Sweden (86%), Greece, Slovenia and the Netherlands (84% each) are the most likely to be convinced of the importance of its role; this opinion is shared by fewer than half of respondents in the United Kingdom (49%).

Finally, six out of ten Europeans (60%) consider that the role played by the Council of the European Union is important; the Council is the least well-known of the institutions tested in this survey. Almost nine out of ten Cypriots (88%) and 86% of Greeks consider that its role is important, compared with a smaller proportion in the Nordic countries (51% of Danes and Swedes and 55% of Finns), and in Austria (54%) and only a minority of respondents in the United Kingdom (36%).

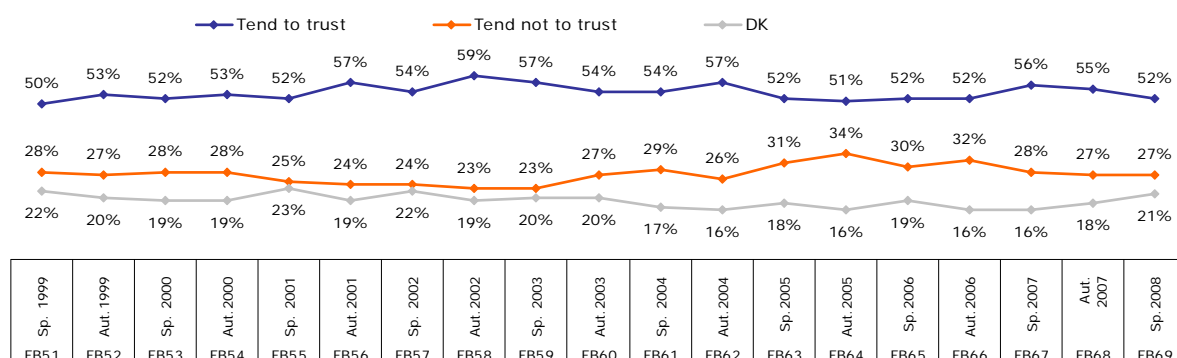

In general, respondents in Cyprus, Greece and Belgium are the most convinced of the importance of the European institutions; this opinion is far less widespread among UK respondents.

3.2 Trust in the European institutions

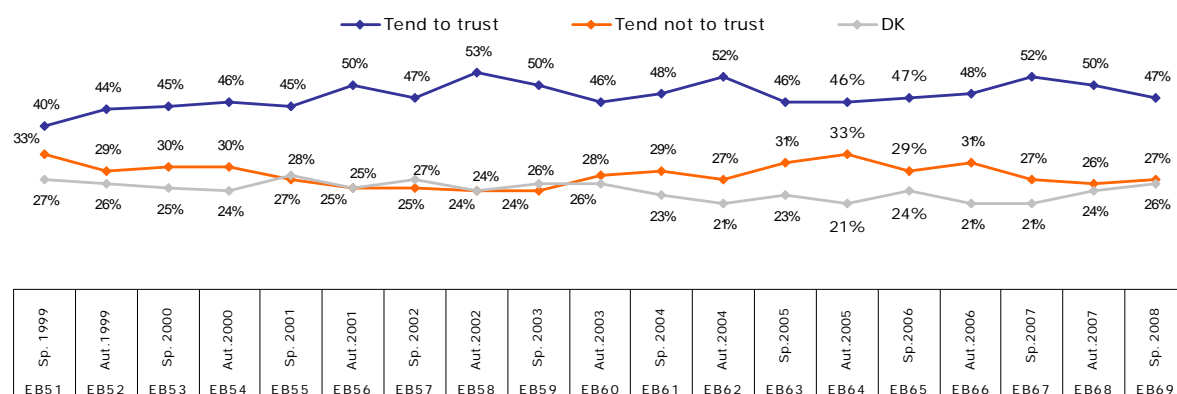

- Trust in the European institutions has fallen very slightly -

The majority of Europeans trust the European Union's institutions: 52% trust the European Parliament, 50% the European Central Bank, 47% the European Commission and finally 43% the Council of the European Union, which is less familiar to citizens (31% of 'DK' replies, i.e. 10 percentage points more than for the European Parliament for the same question).

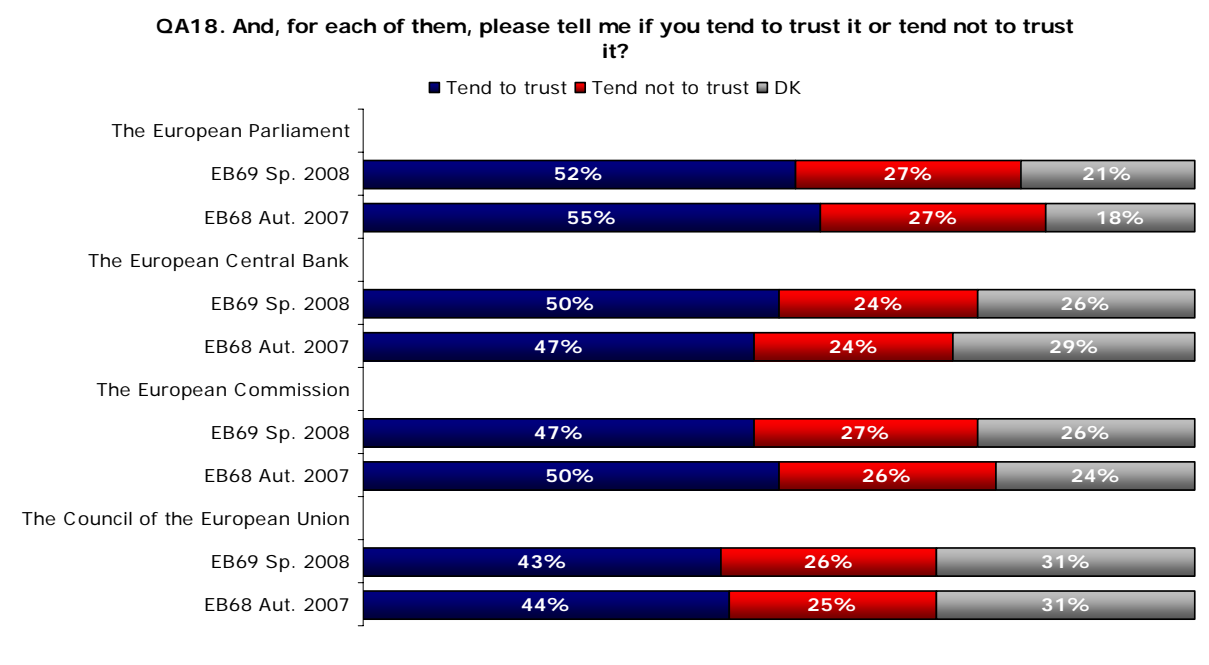

QA18.1 And, for each of them, please tell me if you tend to trust it or tend not to trust it?
- The European Parliament - % EU

QA18.2 And, for each of them, please tell me if you tend to trust it or tend not to trust it?
- The European Commission - % EU

Although there have been no spectacular changes here, trust in the European Parliament and in the European Commission has fallen slightly (-3 percentage points in both cases), while the level of trust in the Council is stable (-1 percentage point) and has increased for the European Central Bank (+3 percentage points).

In general, we note that Belgians and, to a lesser extent, respondents in Cyprus, Spain, Portugal and Greece are the most trusting, while the United Kingdom is still the only Member State in which the majority of people polled do not trust the four European institutions in question. Levels of trust in these institutions are also low in Latvia, Austria and Italy.

It will be noted that, many respondents in the Baltic States, the United Kingdom, Bulgaria and Romania did not express an opinion on whether they trusted these four institutions.

In the candidate countries, respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia are particularly likely to trust the European institutions. A majority of Croats and Turks either distrust these institutions or did not express an opinion.

From a socio-demographic point of view, we note that while Europeans aged between 40 and 54 are the most knowledgeable about the European institutions, people aged between 15 and 24 trust them most, except in the case of the European Central Bank.

3.3.1 The reasons why citizens trust the European institutions

- The democratic nature of decision-making and the defence of the interests of all citizens are the main reasons given by Europeans for their trust in the European institutions -

When asked about the reasons why they do or do not trust the four European institutions covered in this survey, the replies of citizens in the twenty seven Member States are very consistent.

QA19 Which of the following are the main reasons for trusting... the European Parliament - the European Commission ? (MAX.2 ANSWERS)

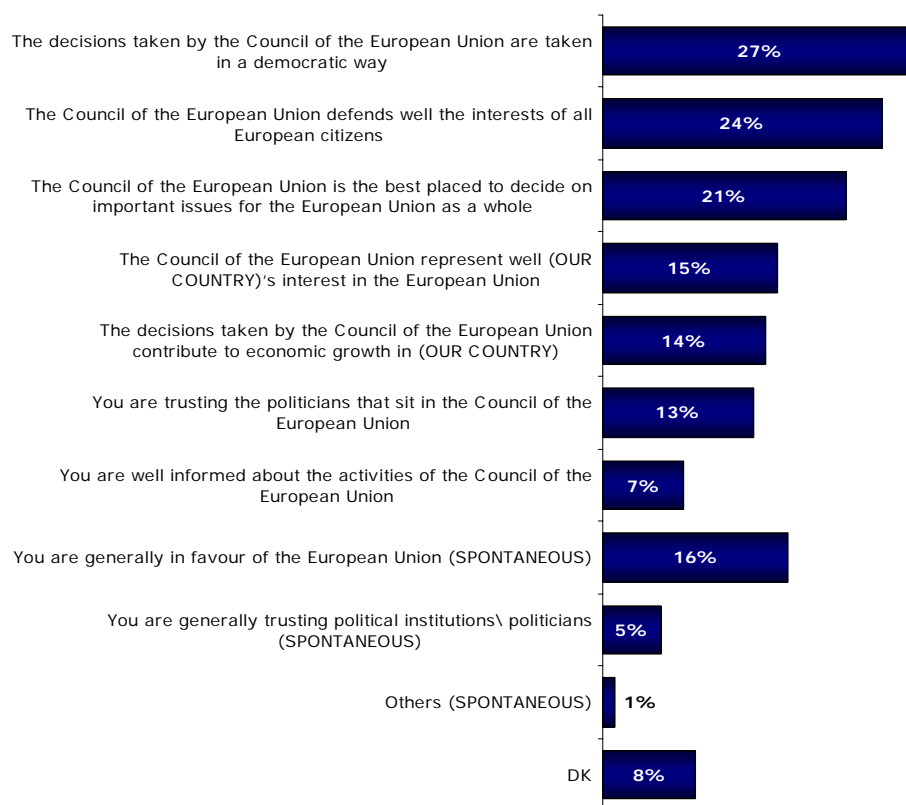

Basis: QA19 – Those who trust the European Parliament (52%) ; QA21 – Those who trust the European Commission (47%)

The three reasons most frequently mentioned by Europeans to explain their trust in the Parliament and the Commission are the democratic way in which decisions are taken (36% for the Parliament and 28% for the Commission), the defence of the interests of all citizens (28% for the Parliament, 26% for the Commission) and the fact that the members of the institution concerned are the best placed to decide on issues concerning the European Union as a whole (23% for the Parliament, 23% for the Commission). The democratic aspect was more often mentioned for the European Parliament; this is not surprising as the Parliament is the only one of the institutions whose members are elected by universal suffrage, in the European elections.

QA23. Which of the following are the main reasons for trusting the Council of the European Union? (MAX. 2 ANSWERS)

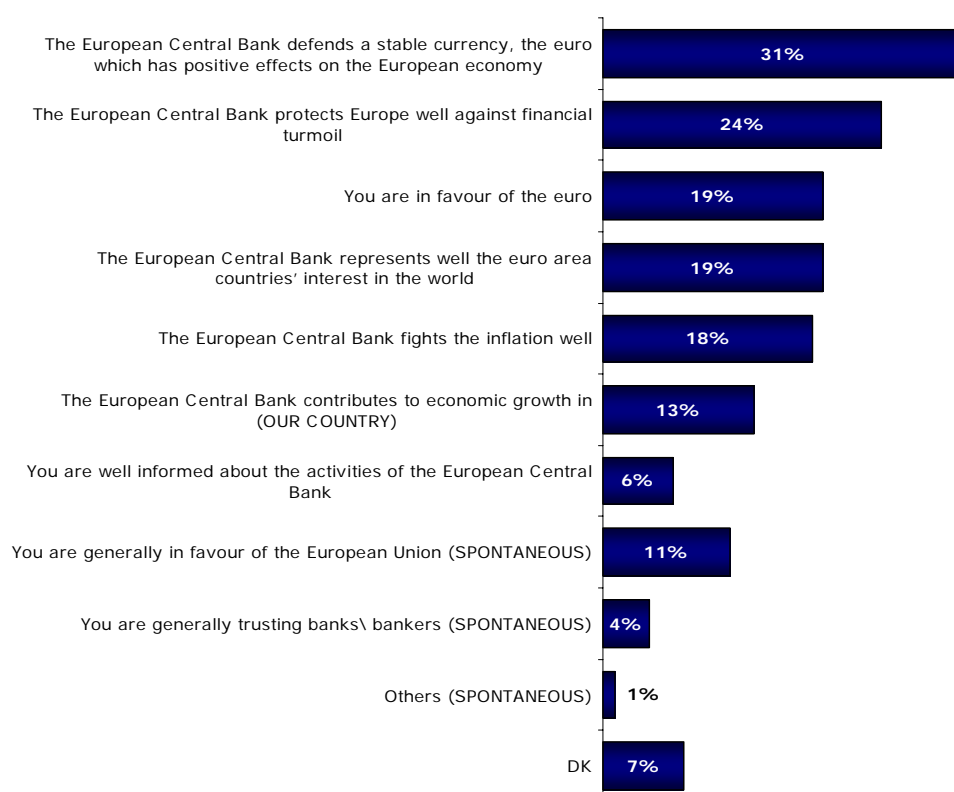

Basis: Those who trust the Council of the European Union (43%)

The three most frequently mentioned reasons are exactly the same for the Council of the European Union, even if each reason was mentioned less frequently than for the first two institutions. This can be explained directly by the fact that the Council is less well known.

The democratic way in which decisions are taken (27% for the Council of the European Union), the defence of the interests of all citizens (24% for the Council) and the fact that the members of the institution concerned are the best placed to take decisions on issues concerning the European Union as a whole (21% for the Council) are therefore also the three main reasons why European trust the Council of the European Union.

The reasons given by Europeans for trusting the European Central Bank are different, which can be explained by the specific characteristics of this institution: thus, 31% of respondents mentioned that it defends a stable currency, which has positive effects on the European economy, and 24% that it protects Europe against financial turmoil. A fifth of the people polled stated that they were in favour of the euro (19%) and considered that the European Central Bank was good at representing the interests of the euro zone countries in the world (also 19%).

QA25. Which of the following are the main reasons for trusting the European Central Bank?
(MAX. 2 ANSWERS)

Basis: Those who trust the European Central Bank (50%)

It is interesting to note that the answers of respondents in the euro zone countries differ only slightly from those of the countries that have not adopted the single currency. The answers diverge the most on the item "The European Central Bank contributes to economic growth in (OUR COUNTRY)", but not necessarily in the way expected: the countries not in the euro zone mentioned this reason more frequently to explain their trust in the European Central Bank (18% versus 12% in the euro zone).

QA25a Which of the following are the main reasons for trusting the European Central Bank? (MAX. 2 ANSWERS)
	EU27	EURO AREA	NON EURO

Others (SPONTANEOUS)	1%	1%	0%
DK	7%	7%	8%

Basis: Those who trust the European Central Bank (50%)

We then asked Europeans to explain their reasons for not trusting the European institutions. The main reason given for the European Union's political institutions is the distance between these institutions and ordinary citizens: 41% for the European Parliament, 34% for the European Commission and 32% for the Council of the European Union. The score for the European Parliament is more emphatic, for two reasons: first of all, the fact that citizens are more familiar with this institution explains that most of the items are mentioned in greater proportions. Then again, the level of 'DK' replies is also lower for the Parliament (3%, versus 6% for the Commission and 7% for the Council). Furthermore, this answer demonstrates that their expectations of the European Parliament are therefore higher than for the other institutions, and the perceived distance between the Parliament and citizens is felt more acutely.

Secondly, approximately a quarter of Europeans who do not trust the Community's political institutions also regret the lack of information (25% for the Parliament, 26% for the Commission and the Council of the Union).

17% of respondents consider that the decisions taken by the Parliament have a detrimental effect on economic growth in their country (12% for the Commission and 11% for the Council). An identical percentage (17%) do not trust the "political representatives" to the European Commission (16% for the Parliament and the Council). The same number of respondents also mentioned, as the reason for not trusting the European Council, that they do not trust political institutions and politicians in general.

QA26 Which of the following are the main reasons for not trusting the European Central Bank? - % EU (MAX. 2 ANSWERS)

The European Central Bank defends a stable currency, the euro, which has negative effects on the European economy	8%
Others (SPONTANEOUS)	2%
DK	8%

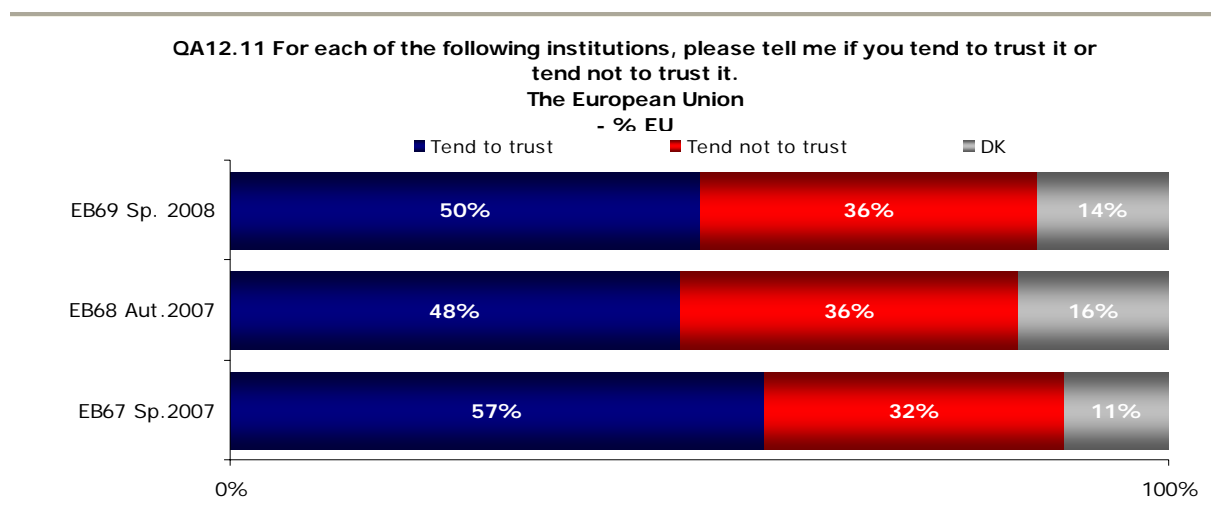

Basis: Those who do not trust the European Central Bank (24%)

A quarter of respondents said that they did not have enough information about the European Central Bank (26%). One in five respondents considered that it was not sufficiently effective in fighting inflation (20%), while 19% were against the euro and a similar proportion did not trust banks and bankers in general.

3.3 Trust in the European Union

- Trust in the European Union has increased -

One in two Europeans trust the European Union (50%), i.e. 2 percentage points higher than in autumn 2007⁴. This increase is worth emphasising since, as we have seen, levels of trust in the various national and European political institutions have fallen.

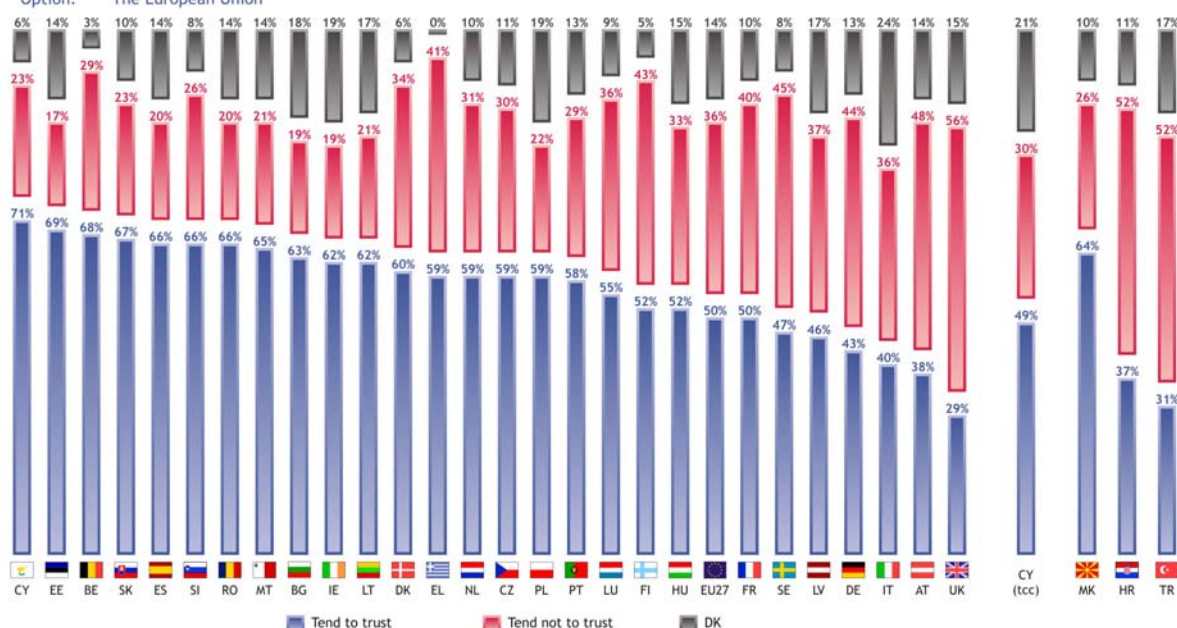

Seven out of ten Cypriots (71%), more than two thirds of Estonians (69%), Belgians (68%) and Slovaks (67%), 66% of Spaniards, Romanians and Slovenes and 65% of Maltese respondents trust it. In four Member States, the majority of respondents do not trust the European Union: in the United Kingdom where fewer than three out of ten people polled trust it (29%, versus 56% who distrust it), in Austria (38% trust it versus 48% who do not), in Italy (40% trust it versus 36% who do not). In Germany, respondents are almost split down the middle, with distrust winning by a short head (44% versus 43% who trust it).

⁴ QA12.11 I would like to ask you a question about how much trust you have in certain institutions. For each of the following institutions, please tell me if you tend to trust it or tend not to trust it.
 The European Union

Question: QA12.11. I would like to ask you a question about how much trust you have in certain institutions. For each of the following institutions, please tell me if you tend to trust it or tend not to trust it.

Option: The European Union

Inhabitants of the candidate countries have diametrically opposed opinions: whereas almost two thirds of inhabitants of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia trust the European Union (64%), only a minority of respondents trust it in Croatia (37%) and Turkey (31%).

As regards changes in the scores recorded on this question, there are substantial variations between the Member States. Trust has fallen by 8 percentage points in Hungary and Austria; it has increased very considerably in Cyprus (+16 percentage points) and fairly significantly also in Malta, Slovakia and Finland (+9 percentage points in all three countries), in Spain (+8 percentage points) and finally in Sweden and Ireland (+7 percentage points).

The answers here mirror the results noted previously for several questions: the confidence expressed by respondents in Cyprus and Malta in their personal futures and that of the EU27 is far higher than the European average.

The previous waves of the Eurobarometer have revealed that Europeans tend to place far more trust in the European Union and the European institutions than in their national institutions; this also holds true for the spring 2008 survey: approximately half of Europeans trust the European Union (50%), the European Parliament (52%) and the European Commission (47%), compared with approximately a third who trust their national parliament (34%) and their national government (32%).

At national level, it is possible to identify several groups corresponding to different patterns of trust.

In most Member States, more citizens trust the European Union than distrust it. Trust is the most widespread in Cyprus, Estonia and Belgium. In Germany, Italy, Austria and the United Kingdom and in two candidate countries, Turkey and Croatia, only a minority of respondents trust the European Union. Since the previous wave, there has been a shift of opinion in Finland and Sweden, where more citizens now trust the European Union than distrust it.

Reflecting the profound divergence noted at European level, respondents in most countries place far more trust in the European Union than in national institutions. This is also the case for European political institutions. Finland, Sweden, Denmark and Austria are the exceptions to this rule, since one or both of their national institutions are more trusted than the European Union, Commission or Parliament. Citizens in Luxembourg place an identical degree of trust in the European Union and in national and European institutions, with despite everything a barely higher level of trust in the European Parliament.

In the United Kingdom, none of these institutions enjoys the trust of a majority of the population. In Germany, only the European Parliament enjoys the trust of 50% of the population. Levels of trust are also low in Latvia, Austria and Turkey. This could indicate a general distrust of all political institutions.

Trust in national parliaments is the highest in Cyprus and the three Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland and Sweden), while trust in national governments is the highest in Cyprus, Finland, Estonia and Malta.

In most countries, the variations in levels of trust in the European Union between spring 2008 and the EB68 wave of autumn 2007 are more positive than those noted for national parliaments and governments, whether in terms of bigger increases or smaller falls. On the other hand, levels of trust in national and European institutions alike have fallen.

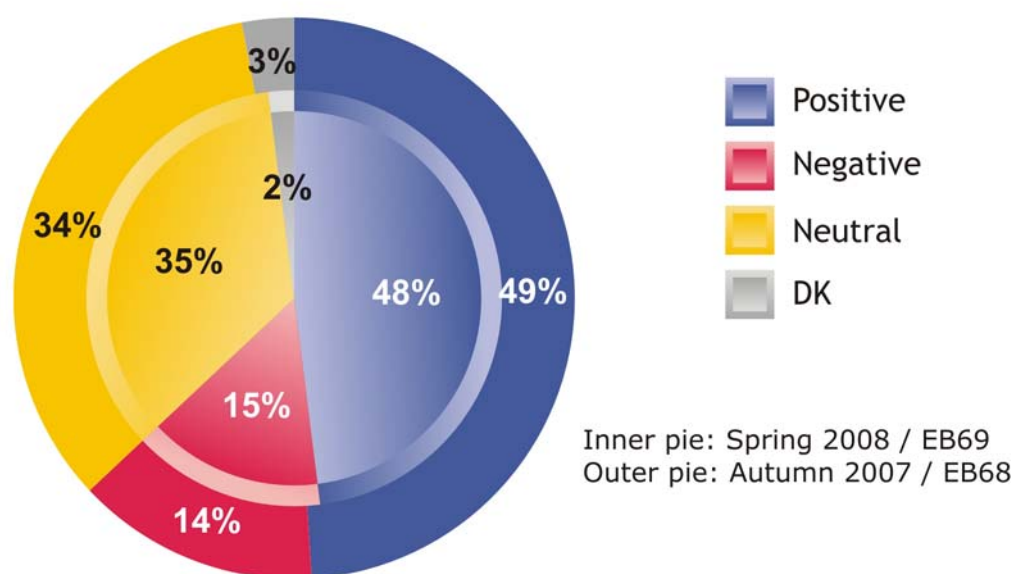

In short, it appears that economic uncertainties are prompting Europeans to lose trust in political institutions – at both national and Community levels, even if the latter still enjoy far greater trust – while the European Union as a concept perhaps embodies potential stability in a context of global economic challenges.

3.4 The European Union's image

- For a small majority of citizens the European Union conjures up a positive image -

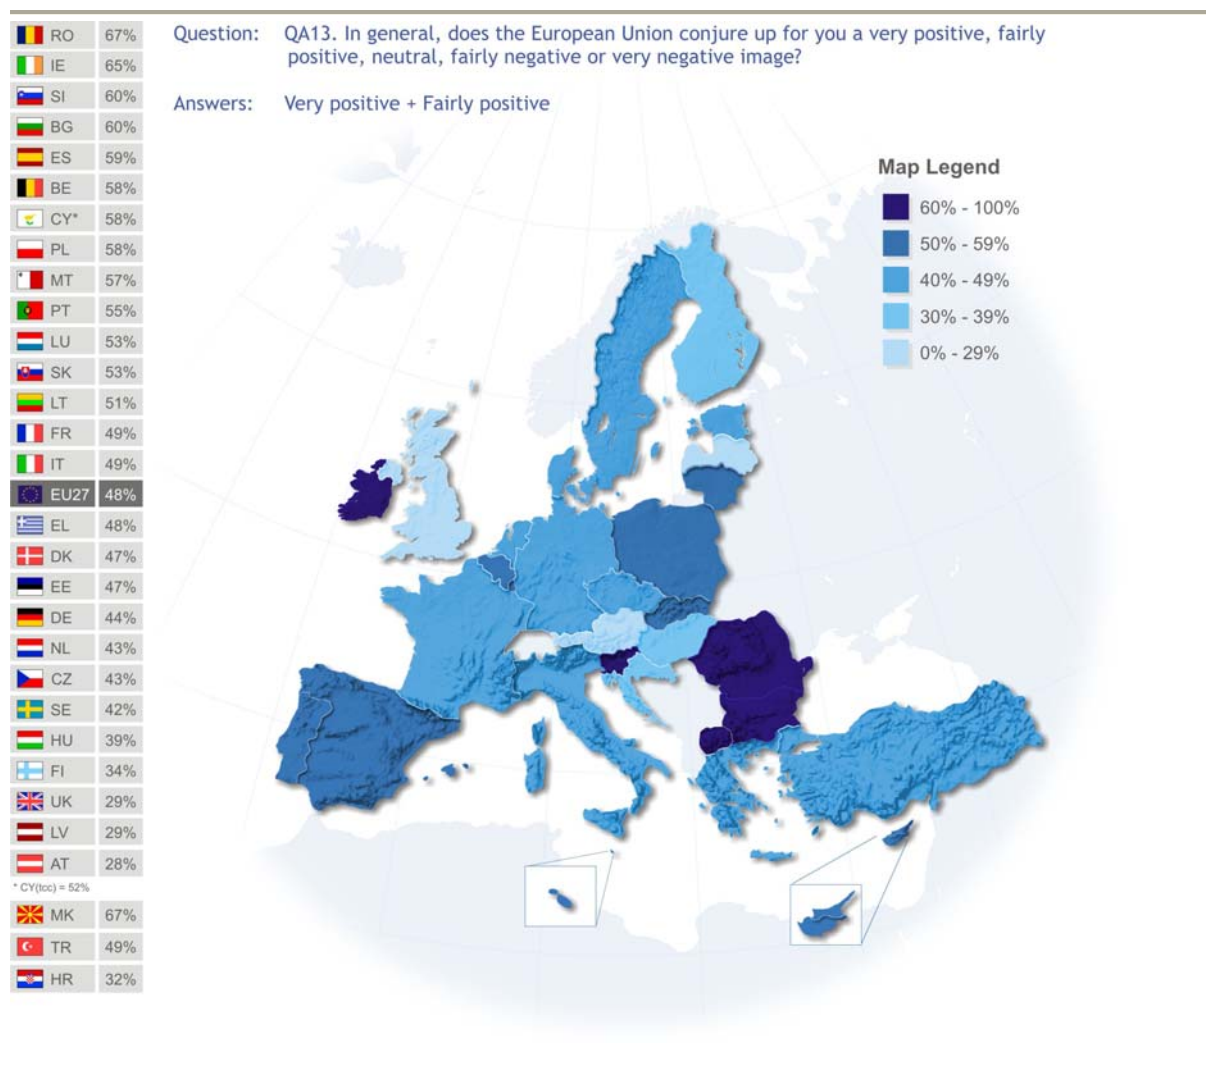

Nearly half of Europeans also consider that the European Union's image is positive (48%); this result has remained stable (-1 percentage point) since autumn 2007. 15% of the people polled (+1 percentage point) stated that the European Union's image is negative, while for a third its image is neutral (35%, +1 percentage point)⁵.

Question: QA13 In general, does the European Union conjure up for you a very positive, fairly positive, neutral, fairly negative or very negative image?

Approximately two thirds of respondents in Romania (67%) and Ireland (65%), six out of ten Slovenes and Bulgarians (60%), 59% of Spaniards and 58% of Belgians, Cypriots and Poles stated that the European Union conjures up a positive image for them, compared with 28% of Austrians and fewer than three out of ten respondents in the United Kingdom and Latvia (29%).

⁵ QA14 In general, does the European Union conjure up for you a very positive, fairly positive, neutral, fairly negative or very negative image?

The majority of respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia not only trust the European Union, they also consider that its image is positive (67%). This opinion is shared by the majority of Turks (49%), while Croats are more divided: for almost a third of them (32%) the European Union's image is positive, while for a quarter (26%) its image is negative and for the majority (40%) its image is neutral.

The correlation between the various support indicators and knowledge of the European Union is once again confirmed: the perception of the European Union's image is strongly linked to the results obtained for the main Eurobarometer indicators. Some 75% of the people polled who said that they trust the European Union consider that its image is positive, compared with 18% of those who distrust it. Likewise, the vast majority of the respondents who consider that their country's membership of the European Union is a good thing (73% compared with only 23% of those who think the opposite) and of those who consider that their country has benefited from its membership (70% versus 18%) consider that the European Union's image is positive.

3.4.1 Perceptions of the transparency of the European institutions

- The majority of Europeans consider that the European institutions do not function in a transparent way, although they consider such transparency to be important -

Having examined the trust that Europeans have in the European Union institutions, it is now interesting to analyse their perceptions of the transparency of the institutions and to look at the importance that citizens attach to such transparency.

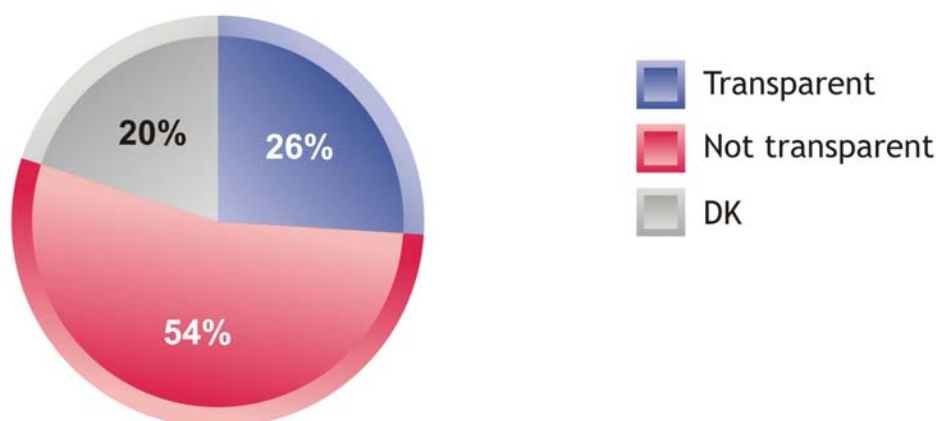

Citizens in the Member States attach particular importance to the level of transparency of the European institutions. More than four fifths of them (84%) consider that it is important for the institutions to function in a transparent way; this is the view in particular of almost all Greeks (83%) and Cypriots (82%) for whom this is very important. More than six out of ten respondents in Malta and Spain (63 and 62% respectively) and 60% of Swedes share this opinion.

Question: QA33. Would you say that it is very important, important, not very important or not important at all for you that the institutions of the European Union function in a transparent way?

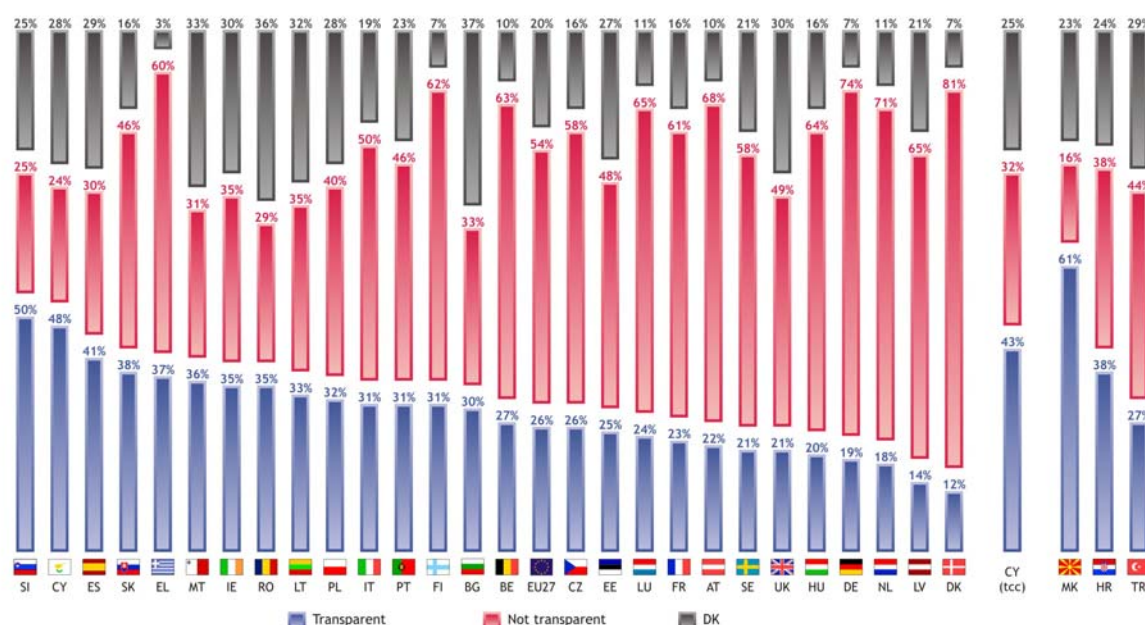

However, when asked a second question on how they perceive the transparency of the European institutions, more than half of Europeans said that they were not transparent: 54% compared with a quarter who expressed the opposite opinion (26%). Note that one in five Europeans (20%) did not answer question.

Question: QA32. According to you, how transparent are the institutions of the European Union today? Would you say that they are very transparent, transparent, not very transparent or not transparent at all?

The view that the institutions of the European Union are lacking in transparency is the most prevalent in Denmark (81%), Germany (74%) and the Netherlands (71%). Only 24% of Cypriots, a quarter of Slovenes (25%), 29% of Romanians and three out of ten respondents in Spain and Malta (30 and 31% respectively) share this view. In five Member States, a majority of respondents consider that the European institutions function in a transparent way: Slovenia (50%), Cyprus (48%), Spain (41%), Malta (36%) and Romania (35%). This is also the case in the Turkish Cypriot Community (43%). The results recorded in Cyprus, Spain and Malta are particularly remarkable, given the importance that they attach to transparency in the operations of the European Union's institutions.. However, the Irish are greatly divided on this question, with identical proportions considering that the institutions are, and are not. transparent (35%).

Question: QA32. According to you, how transparent are the institutions of the European Union today? Would you say that they are very transparent, transparent, not very transparent or not transparent at all?

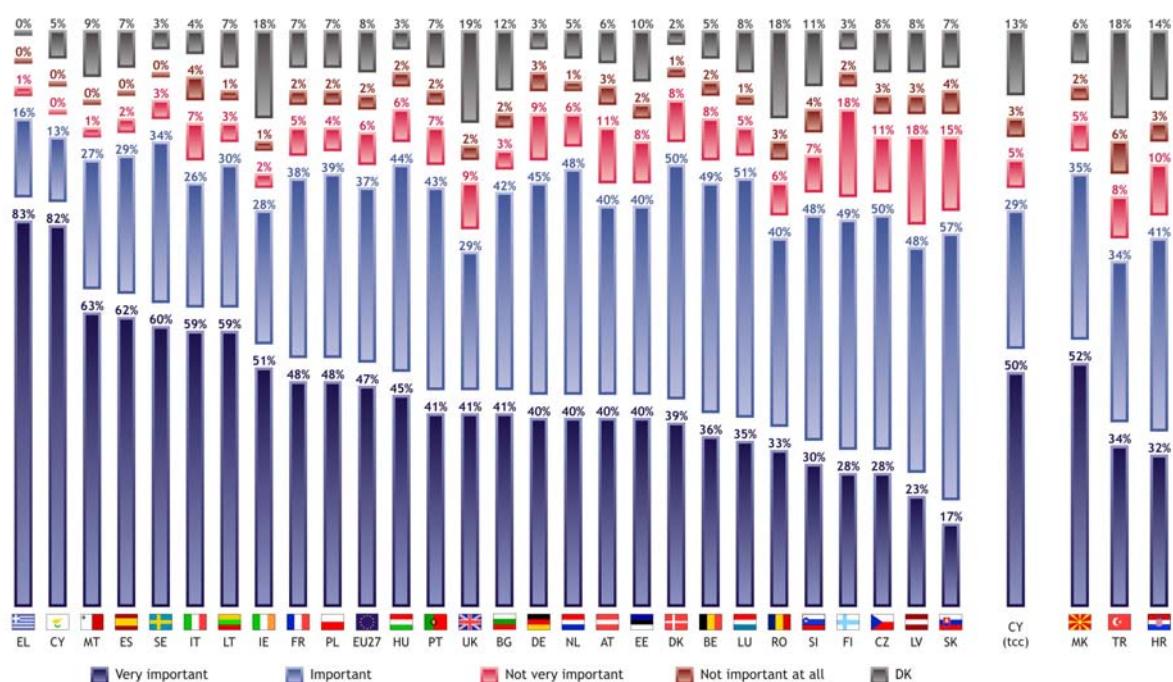

It will be noted that, in some countries, a large number of people failed to answer this question (37% of respondents in Bulgaria, 36% in Romania, 33% in Malta and 32% in Lithuania).

The opinions expressed by respondents in Turkey are also similar to those of citizens of the EU27 Member States concerning the level of transparency of the European institutions (44% consider that they are not transparent). However, the majority of inhabitants of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (61%) consider that the European institutions are transparent, while Croats are split down the middle on this subject (38%).

On these questions, the answers of the people polled in the candidate countries are fairly close to those of citizens in the EU27 Member States: 87% of respondents in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, almost three quarters of Croats (73%) and two thirds of Turks (68%) consider that transparency is important.

Question: QA33. Would you say that it is very important, important, not very important or not important at all for you that the institutions of the European Union function in a transparent way?

4. The way the European Union works

4.1 Knowledge of the European Union

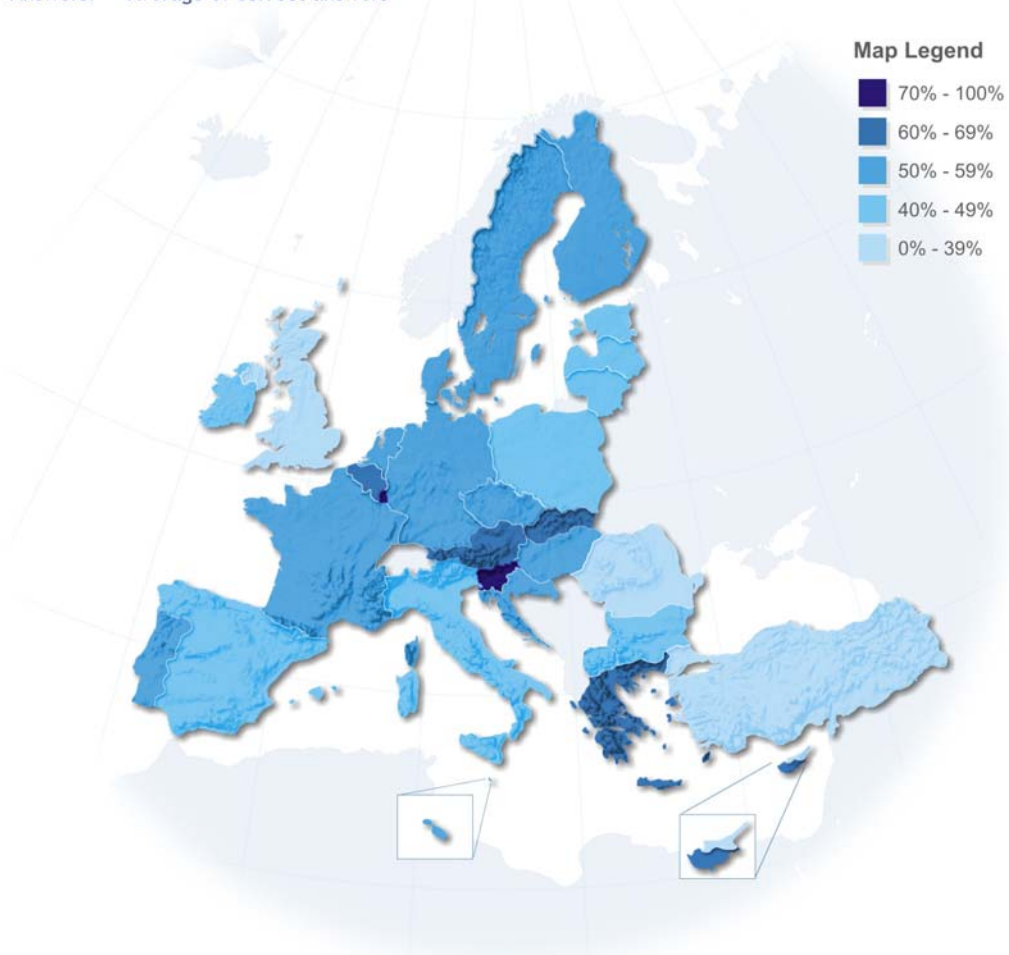

- Europeans' knowledge of the European Union is stable -

When tested via a "quiz question" on their knowledge of the European Union, two thirds of Europeans knew that Switzerland was not a member of the European Union (68%). More than half of respondents gave the right answer to the question on the exact number of Member States (52%) and knew that, every six months, a different country took over the Presidency of the Council of the European Union (51%). On the other hand, only 28% of the people polled were aware that the euro zone is composed of fifteen not twelve members, including 32% of citizens in the euro zone compared with 21% of those living in the other Member States. In total, the percentage of right answers across Europe was 50%. In other words, 84% of Europeans gave at least one right answer to one of the three quiz questions.

Question: QA34. For each of the following statements about the European Union could you please tell me whether you think it is true or false.

Answers: Average of correct answers

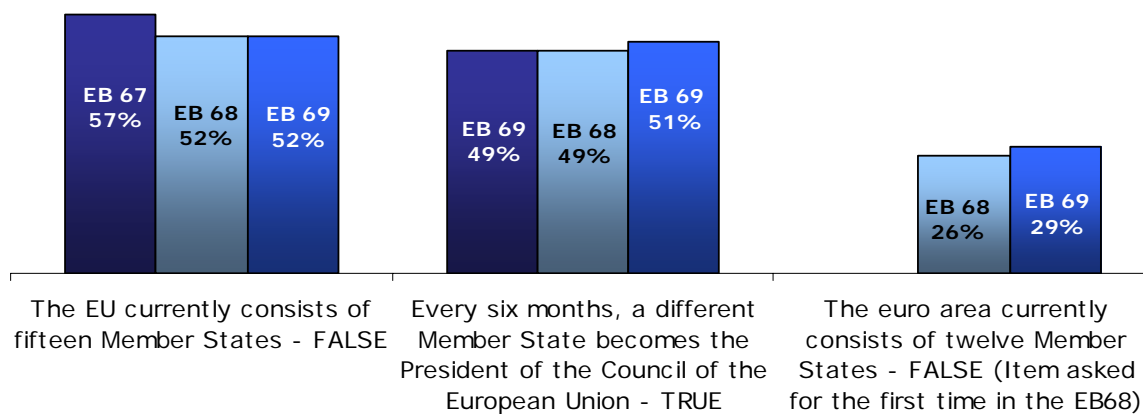

Citizens in Luxembourg and Slovenia are the most knowledgeable: 75% of right answers in both cases. In addition, almost four out of ten respondents in these two Member States got all four questions right (39% in Luxembourg and 38% of Slovenes). Two thirds of Austrians (66%) are also well informed about how the European Union works. On the other hand, only a third of respondents in the United Kingdom (35%) gave the right answers to the questions they were asked.

Overall, the results are stable in comparison with those of autumn 2007: 52% are aware that the European Union has more than fifteen Member States – a result which is unchanged – and 51% that every six months a different Member State takes over the Presidency of the Council of the European Union (+2 percentage points). There has been a slight increase in the proportion of respondents who gave the right answer regarding the composition of the euro zone: 29% now know that it is no longer composed of twelve members following the adoption of the single currency by Slovenia in 2007, and by Cyprus and Malta in 2008, compared with 26% at the time of the EB68 wave (+3 percentage points).

It will be noted that, on average, a relatively high proportion of Europeans abstained on these questions: 34% on the question concerning the number of states that are members of the euro zone, 28% for the question on the Presidency of the Council of the European Union, 24% on the number of Member States of the European Union and 18% on the question concerning Switzerland's membership of the European Union.

The rate of right answers among Croats and citizens of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia is close to that of the citizens of the European Union Member States (on average 54% and 44% right answers respectively to the four questions). On the other hand, only a quarter of Turks are familiar with how the European Union works, although there was a very high level of 'DK' replies there: 50% on average.

4.2 The Presidency of the Council of the European Union

- Europeans are poorly informed about the country that acts as President of the Council of the European Union -

For the first time in this Eurobarometer, the question on awareness regarding the Presidency of the Council of the European Union was asked in all the twenty seven Member States and no longer, as previously, solely in the Member State acting as President of the Council at the time the survey was conducted.

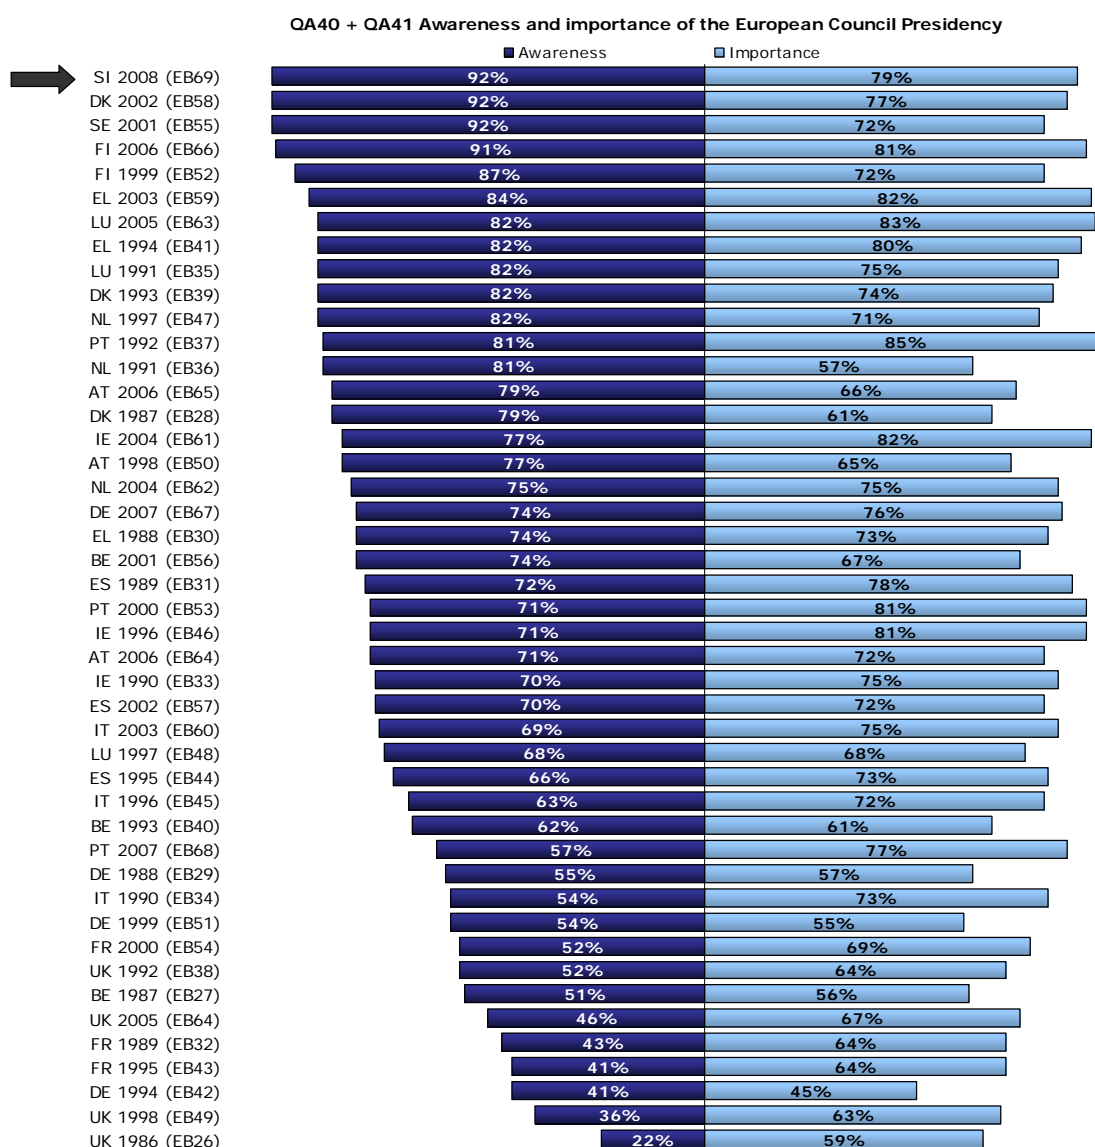

Question: QA40. In the European Union, each Member State, in turn, becomes the President of the Council of the European Union for six months. Right now, it's the turn of Slovenia. Have you recently read in the newspapers or heard on the radio or television or seen on Internet anything about the Slovenian's Presidency

Only one fifth of Europeans (20%) had read or heard something about Slovenia's Presidency of the Council of the European Union⁶.

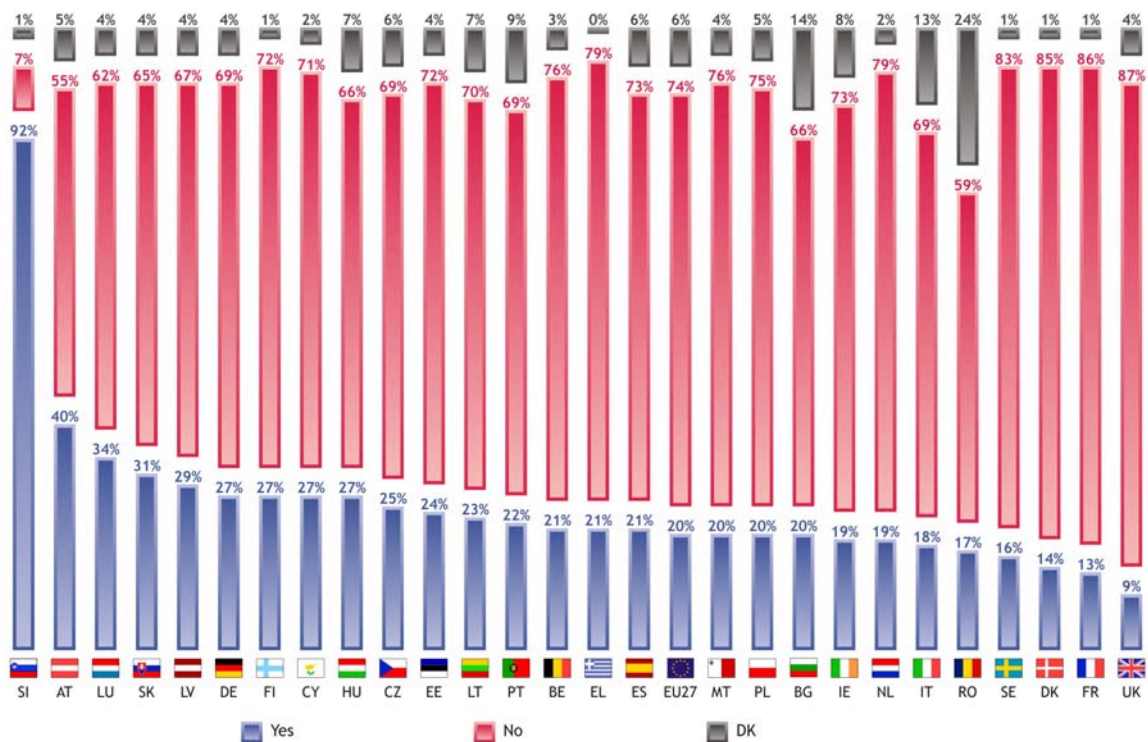

The answers purely for Slovenia, which held the Presidency at the time this Eurobarometer was conducted, are presented in the following chart to facilitate a comparison over time.

Inhabitants of Slovenia, which held the Presidency of the Council at the time of the survey, are by far the best informed about this responsibility, since almost all of them were aware of it (92%). Their score regarding awareness of their country's Presidency equals the record set by Sweden in 2001 and by Denmark in 2002. The event seems to have been given very wide media coverage in Slovenia. Four out of ten Austrians (40%) and more than a third of respondents in Luxembourg (34%) also declared that they had read or heard something about this subject.

Have you recently read in the newspapers or heard on the radio or television or seen on Internet anything about Slovenian's presidency?

On the other hand, fewer than one in ten respondents in the United Kingdom (9%) and only 13% of the French and 14% of Danes were aware of it.

An analysis of the socio-demographic results and a cross-tabulation of results reveal other differences.

- ◆ While almost a quarter of the men interviewed (24%) stated that they had heard, read or seen something about the Slovenian Presidency, only 16% of women were aware of it.
- ◆ The respondent's age is also an important factor in the variations noted: more than a fifth of the oldest respondents (22% for those aged 55 or over and 21% for those aged between 40 and 54) had heard, read or seen something about the Slovenian Presidency, while only 15% of those in the 15-24 age group were aware of it.
- ◆ Almost three out of ten respondents with a good knowledge of the European Union (29%) had read, seen or heard something about this subject. On the other hand, only 5% of the respondents whose knowledge of the European Union is poor can say the same.

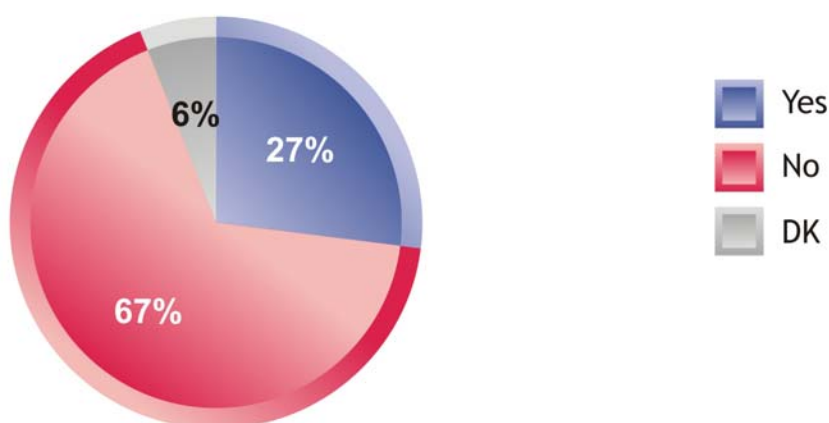

Despite these differences, it is patently obvious that there was a widespread lack of information about the Slovenian Presidency, as awareness of the event was low in all the categories analysed.

The question on the importance attached by citizens to the responsibility of holding the Presidency of the Council of the European Union was only asked in Slovenia.

Almost eight out of ten (79%) considered that their country's Presidency of the European Union was an important responsibility and 40% even considered it very important. Only five countries have recorded a higher score: Portugal (85% in 1992, 81% in 2000), Luxembourg (83% in 2005), Ireland (82% in 2004), Greece (82% in 2003, 80% in 1994) and Finland, with 81% in 2006. May we remind you that Slovenia was the first of the countries that joined the European Union in 2004 to assume this responsibility.

This Eurobarometer survey was also the first to ask the question regarding awareness of the next country to hold the Presidency of the European Union in all the twenty seven Member States and not only, as in the past, in the Member State which was due to take over the Presidency a few months after the completion of the survey.

Question: QA42. In the European Union, each Member State, in turn, becomes the President of the Council of the European Union for six months. From July the 1st 2008 it will be the turn of France. Have you recently read in the newspapers or heard on the radio or television or seen on the Internet anything about France's presidency?

A slightly higher proportion of respondents (27%) had read or heard something about France's future Presidency of the European Union from 1 July 2008, including six out of ten Slovenes (62%), half of French respondents (49%), 42% of respondents in Luxembourg, 39% of Austrians and a third of Finns (35%), Germans and Swedes (33%). The contrast between the high level of awareness in Slovenia about the future French Presidency and the low level of awareness among French citizens regarding the then current Slovenian Presidency is striking.

Only 15% of respondents in the United Kingdom, Romania and Bulgaria were aware of it.

A socio-demographic analysis of awareness of the French Presidency highlights certain differences already noted in the socio-demographic analysis in connection with the Slovenian Presidency.

- ◆ As for the Slovenian Presidency, men are more likely than women to have seen or read something about the French Presidency (33% and 22% respectively).
- ◆ The same trend also applies as regards the respondent's age. The oldest respondents are once again the best informed: 31% of those aged 55 or over and 29% of those aged between 40 and 54, compared with only a fifth (20%) of the youngest age group.

- ◆ Almost four out of ten managers (39%) and three out of ten self-employed and retired people (31% and 30% respectively) have seen, read or heard something about the French Presidency. Unemployed people (20%) and house persons (17%) have the lowest scores in the occupation category.
- ◆ Once again, the respondents who are the most knowledgeable about the European Union (40%) are more likely than respondents whose knowledge is poor (8%) to be aware of the French Presidency.

Once again, as in the case of Slovenia, only the French respondents were asked about the importance, in their eyes, of their country's upcoming Presidency of the Council of the European Union.

Question: QA43. Whether you have heard about it or not, do you think it is important or not that France will be President of the Council of the European Union from the 1st of July? Would you say it is...?

Three-quarters of them (73%) also consider that it is important that their country will be President of the Council of the European Union. Of these, three out of ten (28%) even consider it very important.

The further French respondents are to the right of the political spectrum, the more importance they attach to French Presidency of the European Union: 85% of respondents on the right consider it important ("very important" + "important") compared with 69% of those on the left. It is not surprising to find that those of the same political persuasion as the current majority party in France are the most interested in the event.

Some 84% of French respondents who stated that they trust the European Union think that it is important for France to hold the Presidency of the Council of the European Union, compared with 62% who do not trust the European Union.

CONCLUSION

The majority of Europeans are satisfied with their country's membership of the European Union. They are also strongly convinced that their country has benefited from its membership of the EU. However, the scores for these two dimensions have fallen slightly since autumn 2007 (EB68). Improved cooperation between their country and other States and peace are the two main reasons why citizens in the twenty seven Member States consider that they have benefited from their country's membership of the European Union. Half of the people polled believe that the European Union has a positive image and two thirds are confident in its future.

Knowledge of the European institutions is stable. Although the level of trust which citizens have in the European institutions has fallen slightly, it is still higher than that placed in national institutions. Moreover, it seems that this fall in trust is, in all likelihood, linked to the growing concerns of citizens of the EU27 Member States, in particular as regards the economy and employment, and the pessimism they feel regarding their personal, professional and financial futures. National institutions are suffering more from the climate of economic uncertainty than the European Union which seems to be seen as a factor for stability in the face of the current economic upheavals.

The democratic nature of decision-making, the defence of the interests of all citizens and the fact that the members of the European institutions are the best placed to take decisions on issues concerning the European Union as a whole are the main reasons given why citizens in the twenty seven Member States trust their institutions. The respondents who say that they do not trust the European institutions consider that these are too distant from ordinary citizens and also complain that they do not have enough information about the institutions in question.

TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS

Between the 25th of March and the 04th of May 2008, TNS Opinion & Social, a consortium created between Taylor Nelson Sofres and EOS Gallup Europe, carried out wave 69.2 of the EUROBAROMETER, on request of the EUROPEAN COMMISSION, Directorate-General for Communication, “Research and Political Analysis”.

The “STANDARD” EUROBAROMETER 69 is part of wave 69.2 and covers the population of the respective nationalities of the European Union Member States, resident in each of the Member States and aged 15 years and over. The “STANDARD” EUROBAROMETER 69 has also been conducted in the three candidate countries (Croatia, Turkey and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia) and in the Turkish Cypriot Community. In these countries, the survey covers the national population of citizens and the population of citizens of all the European Union Member States that are residents in these countries and have a sufficient command of the national languages to answer the questionnaire. The basic sample design applied in all states is a multi-stage, random (probability) one. In each country, a number of sampling points was drawn with probability proportional to population size (for a total coverage of the country) and to population density.

In order to do so, the sampling points were drawn systematically from each of the “administrative regional units”, after stratification by individual unit and type of area. They thus represent the whole territory of the countries surveyed according to the EUROSTAT NUTS II (or equivalent) and according to the distribution of the resident population of the respective nationalities in terms of metropolitan, urban and rural areas. In each of the selected sampling points, a starting address was drawn, at random. Further addresses (every Nth address) were selected by standard “random route” procedures, from the initial address. In each household, the respondent was drawn, at random (following the “closest birthday rule”). All interviews were conducted face-to-face in people’s homes and in the appropriate national language. As far as the data capture is concerned, CAPI (Computer Assisted Personal Interview) was used in those countries where this technique was available.

For each country a comparison between the sample and the universe was carried out. The Universe description was derived from Eurostat population data or from national statistics offices. For all countries surveyed, a national weighting procedure, using marginal and intercellular weighting, was carried out based on this Universe description. In all countries, gender, age, region and size of locality were introduced in the iteration procedure. For international weighting (i.e. EU averages), TNS Opinion & Social applies the official population figures as provided by EUROSTAT or national statistic offices. The total population figures for input in this post-weighting procedure are listed above.

Readers are reminded that survey results are estimations, the accuracy of which, everything being equal, rests upon the sample size and upon the observed percentage. With samples of about 1,000 interviews, the real percentages vary within the following confidence limits:
