

Brussels, 27 January 2010

In the political guidelines for the new Commission which I presented to the European Parliament in September, I set out why this is a time of great opportunity for Europe. Our ambition should be to use the next five years to put the enlarged Europe firmly on the path to a sustainable and successful future. I am delighted that you will be joining the Commission to work within these guidelines and to help deliver our agenda for 2020.

The Commission is the essential motor for the European Union's efforts to address tomorrow's challenges and to use the benefits of the Lisbon Treaty to best effect. Europe needs a strong, political and dynamic Commission to offer the leadership and direction to drive this work forward.

The portfolio for International Cooperation, Humanitarian Aid and Crisis Response

You will be the Commissioner with responsibility for Humanitarian Aid and Crisis Response. You will also take on specific missions in the field of international cooperation, to be defined by me and/or the High Representative/Vice President. As in the past, changing circumstances may also mean that I will need to take a fresh look at the mix of portfolios in the course of the mandate, and may change responsibilities accordingly.

This is an innovative portfolio which brings together the instruments for civil protection and emergency response.

- You will be responsible for Humanitarian aid which is one of the most crucial, and visible, ways in which the EU can fulfil its global responsibilities. The current responsibilities of the Humanitarian Aid DG (ECHO) will be strengthened by the recognition of this task as a self-standing policy in the Lisbon Treaty, with an important political responsibility to respect the principles of neutrality, impartiality and non-discrimination. This involves both the effective and swift delivery of aid, and the promotion of respect for international humanitarian law.

Mrs Kristalina GEORGIEVA
Commissioner designate

- I would like you to bring these responsibilities together with the work of the Monitoring and Information Centre (MIC) as a critical tool for practical solidarity inside and outside the EU.

This portfolio will require close cooperation between yourself and the High Representative/Vice-President, and with the Commissioner responsible for Home Affairs who will be responsible for crisis response inside the EU, drawing on the MIC.

To help you to fulfil these responsibilities, the DG for Humanitarian Aid (ECHO) will be under your authority, and will be supplemented by Units A3 and A4 from DG Environment.

Working together as a College

As President, I am determined to ensure that the College of Commissioners is the political heart of the Commission. Being a College means that all can contribute to decisions, and all share collective responsibility once initiatives are adopted. The Commission must be a team, working together effectively to ensure the coherence and consistency of Commission policies. I will lead regular meetings and orientation debates to discuss important or cross-cutting proposals during their preparatory phase, to ensure relevant input from all Commissioners. My Cabinet, the Secretariat General and the Legal Service will work closely with your Cabinet and your services to make this approach a reality. As you know, and according to the Treaty, the President is the guarantor of collegiality.

Our effectiveness and credibility rests upon the quality of our output, our professionalism, and our respect for the highest standards of public service ethics. This requires a rigorous smart regulation agenda, respecting subsidiarity and proportionality and devoting our attention to where we can bring clear added value; particular attention to sound financial management; and full respect for the Code of Conduct of the Members of the European Commission. It also, of course, means that we must stay focused on our overriding mission to promote and defend the common European interest. I will establish the guidelines within which the Commission is to work and we will discuss them in more detail at one of our forthcoming seminars.

An effective Commission must also form a successful partnership with the Member States and the other institutions, and in particular with the European Parliament. The Treaty of Lisbon sets out the roles of the institutions very clearly. As you know, according to the Treaty, the Commission "shall ensure the application of the Treaties, and of measures adopted by the institutions pursuant to them". It will also bring an important new dimension to our relations with national parliaments.

I would like us to take our partnership with the European Parliament to a new level. That requires an investment, in terms of political attention and in terms of time, from every member of the Commission. Availability for plenary sessions and committee meetings of the Parliament is a central part of the responsibilities of Commissioners, and directly linked to the accountability and legitimacy of the Commission as a whole.

Our first opportunity to start this process will be when you take part in hearings with the parliamentary committee covering your portfolio area. This is one of the foundation stones of the Commission's democratic accountability: it is not only an opportunity to set out your ambitions for your portfolio, but also to illustrate your understanding of the role of the Commission and the obligations of Commissioners.

My experience of a first mandate has shown that when the Commission focuses on the key challenges for Europe, and when we work together effectively, we can deliver enormous benefits to Europeans. I look forward to working together with you to shape a successful future for the EU for the decades to come.
