Study evaluating the legal framework for the free movement of lawyers against market and regulatory developments in the single market

Question

It is unclear in the description of tasks whether aside from the case-studies in a specific number of Member States, inventories of practices and challenges need to be provided for all Member States, 15 Member States (a number used on p.11), or the Member States which will be included in the case-studies.

Answer

The case-studies should illustrate the most common challenges, rather than marginal cases, and should thus be underpinned by research covering as many Member States as possible. Consequently, the inventories should be compiled on the basis of research covering no fewer than 15 Member States (as specified on page 11). However, the final inventories do not have to refer to all the Member States which were included in the research.
