

The EU2020 Strategy promises to deliver but does not seem to include WOMEN in RESEARCH. There are a number of women who have the potential to make a difference if only the right infrastructure is in place. Many women have already produced tangible results which have not been rewarded or taken advantage of because official policies do not contain the appropriate instruments for their recognition.

Women have much to contribute in defining and resolving the major challenges facing Europe: nano-technology, climate change, innovation, sustainable economic growth, employment and education, social cohesion. Please include provisions for their support in the EU2020 Strategy.

Women in Research
University of MALTA