

If catholic schools are to respond to each pupils individual learning needs, what can be done as regards curricula, school organization and the roles of teachers.

When I was in primary school they said that school is our second home. I think that the statement is quite true with regards to spending the majority of our time in it but if you look at it from a different perspective you can see that the school can sometimes be quite a stressful place.

Firstly, if we look at all the different data we have to know in the objective of our curricula, we can see that a lot of subjects demand a lot of your time after school. In an addition to that, can you imagine that you also have problems with the basic understanding of the subject? For example if you do your math homework you normally need about an hour if you know how to solve all the mathematical problems. So, if you don't know the solution this time can be doubled or even tripled.

So, what can school do about it? I think that every school should have an extra curricular class where you can repeat all the things you have to know. Every teacher also has special consultations once a week. There you can ask him all about the problems you are having with your studying.

To conclude I think school can organize some things to help us but it is still up to the student and his approach to school curricula. Because even if you have problems you can sometimes solve them on your own. All it takes is some hard work.
