How can we organize school system
In order
To give all students complete and basic competences?

Nowdays social, economical and cultural changes have produced transformation in the family. So that the educational school system has to be suitably completed with supplementary activities to achieve the formation of pupils' personality. Therefore school system has to be on service of pupils not only in its social, individual, cognitive, educational dimension, but above all it has a new task, it must work in order to promote competences.

For this reason the educational system has to improve and strengthen cultural and organizing enterprises.

The cultural aspect has to provide better instructive opportunities to enrich curricular activities, opening new, more involving and interesting paths since school is the place of a new promp unrepeatable teaching method.

School has to understand changes in course, it has to discover the values of its acting.

Teachers in particular are expected to be culturally updated and above all able to plan new and stimulating paths. So it is important to leave what is known and to search the unknown, involving in this work not only teacher and students but school in its totality. This kind of school does not leave anyone behind, but it fight discrimination and prejudices. It is not only a school of culture but also a school of life.

With regard to the organizing aspect it needs actions that operate on various side of teaching:

- A kind of school system not only organized with traditional lessons but more connected to its own regional territory aiming at achieving a better knowledge of its habits, costumes and traditions, “if you know your land well you will know better people who live there”. This might help students to socialize and to feel at their case in their own environment together with a good co-operation which inside the school system would allow a better formation of the man and the citizen
- A full time school to organize better the making up, the search and study in depth activities.
- The relationship among teachers, tutors, and lab teachers help to improve “giving” and “receiving”
- It is necessary to obtain adequate founds not only for equipments but also for the availability of spaces.
