

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS ENCOURAGE LIFE

It is known that catholic schools are special on some way. We can find them in lots of European countries. They are less represented than public schools, nevertheless many students attend them or wish to be a part of them.

Catholic schools are different from public schools. This is indisputable fact. To start with, a relationship between students and teachers is better than on other, public schools. There is more respect and confidence on catholic schools. If somebody has problems he/she is usually well – received and get help. And usually this person is not participate of mockery because he/she do not understand or know something. On catholic schools students are not just numbers in class yet they are human beings.

After this, on catholic schools teachers do not teach only for marks and students do not learn just for good results (usually). In my opinion, these schools are also schools which prepare students for life, for being adult, mature and responsible persons. In Slovenian catholic schools there is a special subject called Religion, where students learn about world religions, relationship between God and believers, youth, themselves ... Even at other subjects teachers tell students useful advices for life.

I am a student on catholic school in Slovenia which is called Dicesan classical gymnasium. I am very pleased and proud to be a part of this contitution (namely, DCG is just a part of constitution of sant Stanislav – there are music school, home for students ..., too).

Through all four years of studying on this gymnasium I received a lot – not just knowledge for »general outlook« and for faculty but even lots of useful advices and small prudences for life. I have found good friends and made good relationships and contacts with teachers and other employees in constitution.

In my opinion, catholic schools are good schools. Of course they have some faults but nobody is perfect. They are special because they do not just teach students about geograpfy, history and mathematic facts and culture (which is very important, too) but even prepare students for life. They learn students how to think with their own heads. Catholic schools have positive values, important for responsible and good life.
