

BIZMAP.NET

Government departments at national, regional or local level maintain repositories containing information required by business and the citizen. Examples are enterprise records, cadastral maps and the citizen registry. Much of this information is subject to laws on personal data protection. Until now user access has been handled by making a request at a website after which it is serviced by the back office. This approach takes time and resources; it also prevents automated workflow using these public data repositories. What is needed is a fully automated access to such public repositories where the back office processes are integrated with those of the front office (full cycle processing).

The purpose of eTEN project BIZMAP.NET is to provide business operators with full cycle e-government services through the integration of a secure back-office framework with currently available front office access.

Bizmap.net thus aims to fill a gap in this field, providing business operators with full-cycle e-government services. New business models (brokerage services) and key players (e-service brokers) will be defined, so that SME's and government agencies will be supported in the process of business re-engineering.

Bizmap.net will build a single e-government infrastructure by integrating existing applications (electronic document systems, GIS systems, data warehouse of enterprise and citizen registry), which have been developed during previous projects.

The consortium consists of a number of public private partnerships (PPP) in Italy, United Kingdom, Ireland, France, Germany, Bulgaria, Romania. Each PPP consists of one or more local public institutions and private IT service providers. Each private public partnership will independently set up its own local pilot trials for market validation.
