

Seunghae Kim received the B.S. degree in Information & Communication from Hannam University, Korea, in 1996. He received the M.S. degree in Information Science from Chonbuk University, Korea, in 2002. From 2003, he is pursuing the Ph.D. degree in Information Security Engineering at Chonbuk University, Korea.

In 1997, he joined System Engineering Research Institute (SERI), where he engaged in the field of network design and planning, mainly focusing on network management and operation including optical packet switched network.

From 1999, he has been working as a senior researcher in the Korea Institute of Science and Technology Information (KISTI).

He has been working for more than 12 years as a network engineer of KREONET(Korea REsearch & Open NETwork).

He is currently as a project manager, name is " The IPv6 Cluster in Daeduck Science Town(innopolis)", one of the IPv6 deployment project in Korea and he has served as an IPv6 Forum Korea Fellow.

His main interests include IPv6 deployment and adoption in the field, network management, measurement, network security, optical network design.