

Martin Scicluna is the Director General of the Today Public Policy Institute. He is a member of the Council of Europa Nostra and of the Board of the International National Trusts Organisation. He is a Vice President of Din l-Art Helwa. He was the Executive President of Din l-Art Helwa from 2001 to 2005. He is also currently the Adviser to the government of Malta on illegal immigration.

He retired to Malta in 1996 at the end of a career spent first in the British Army and then for 23 years as a civil servant in the Ministry of Defence in London, serving in various policy secretariat appointments before being appointed as the Assistant Under Secretary of State for Army Personnel matters.

He was subsequently Adviser to two Prime Ministers of Malta on defence policy matters until 1999 and Malta's Ambassador to NATO in 1996. He was educated at St Edward's College, at the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst, at the Army Staff College, Camberley and at the Royal College of Defence Studies, London.