

Pierpaolo Campostrini, brief profile

Born in Venice, 1960, lives there.

Degree in Electrical Engineering (1984), he was researcher in the field of Controlled Thermonuclear Fusion, and contract professor in the University of Padua and Udine (Italy) until 1998.

Since the year 2000 he is the Managing Director of CORILA (an association of Universities of Venice and Padua, the Italian Council of Research CNR the National Institute of Oceanography and geophysics OGS) devoted to the coordination of scientific activities for the safeguard of Venice.

He is President of Lagunet - Italian network for lagoon research, President of EUCC- Italy and member of the Council of EUCC -Coastal & Marine Union

He is National representative in the FP7 Committee "Environment (including Climate changes).

He is the Editor of volumes on the safeguarding of Venice and member of the Editorial board of the Journal of Coastal Conservation, Planning and Management (Springer).

He is Lecturer for the Venice International University training programs on Sustainable Development.

He serves as expert in many committees, both national and European and chaired many scientific congresses related to environmental research.