

Digital Single Market

News Article05/07/2012

EU cyber security agency ENISA: Banks should presume customer PCs are infected

Many online banking systems dangerously rely on PCs being secure, but banks should instead presume customer PCs are infected, says the EU's cyber security agency ENISA in response to the reports about the "High Roller" cyber-attack. The attacks drew much attention because they were highly automated, sophisticated and targeted.

Read full text [1]

[2]

Share this page

Source URL: <https://ec.europa.eu/digital-single-market/en/news/eu-cyber-security-agency-enisa-banks-should-presume-customer-pcs-are-infected>

Links

[1]

<http://www.enisa.europa.eu/media/press-releases/eu-cyber-security-agency-enisa-2012high-roller2012d-online-bank-robberies-reveal-security-gaps>

[2] <mailto:>