EU says we should glorify our entrepreneurs:Skype, Spotify and Angry Birds creators advise EU - first stage of "Startup Europe" campaign

Most people think of Silicon Valley in the United States when they think about technology and entrepreneurs - the European Commission wants young Europeans to be inspired by home-grown entrepreneurs, so their bright ideas start and stay in Europe. With help from the creators of Spotify, Angry Birds, Tuenti, Skype, SeedCamp, HackFwd, London's Tech City and TheNextWeb, the Commission is creating a platform for star entrepreneurs to tell their stories of inspirations and frustration, to wake-up young Europeans and leaders to the potential of entrepreneurial careers.
