Europe's own Surfing Route – one of the best in the world [1]

From Ireland to Portugal through the United Kingdom, France, Basque Country and Spain, the European Atlantic Coast has an impressive offer of surf beaches. Some of them are considered to be among the best in the world. SURFINGEUROPE, a project co-funded by EU's COSME programme, brings visibility to these beaches and to surfing in the Atlantic Europe.

The destinations of the route comprise of the following must-stop (and -surf) locations: Viana do Castelo (Portugal), Ribamontan al Mar (Cantabria, Spain), San Sebastian (Basque County, Spain), region of Brittany (France), Bundoran (Ireland) and the regions of South West England, Wales and the Channel Islands (the United Kingdom). Not only do all of these surf destinations have exceptional quality for surfing, having waves nearly 365 days of the year, but they also offer versatile leisure activities, beautiful nature, incredible gastronomy, great people and places.

The project is expected to increase the employment in the tourism sector. Moreover, the tourism flows are expected to grow in each target destination.

For more information, visit their website [2].

Published on 12/07/2017