

Ariane König is a Senior Researcher at the University of Luxembourg. Dr König conducts research and teaches in the field of sustainability science and transformative social learning. Before settling in Luxembourg she was employed at the Universities of Harvard and Oxford, focusing on governance of new technologies and risk, with a focus on agricultural food production. Prior to this, she held a position as regulatory affairs manager and scientific affairs coordinator for a leading multinational life science corporation. She has also worked as independent scientific consultant for the OECD, the European Commission, and EU research consortia. König was appointed as a member of the Luxembourg national Conseil Supérieur pour un Développement Durable in 2013. Ariane König was conferred her Bachelor, Master and Ph.D. in Biochemistry from the University of Cambridge, Emmanuel College.