

Pedro C. Magalhães is a Senior Researcher at the Institute of Social Sciences of the University of Lisbon. He obtained his PhD in Political Science from The Ohio State University in 2003. His research focuses on the study of public opinion, political behavior, and judicial politics, using primarily survey research and experimental data. He is a member of the Portuguese Statistical Council and the coordinator of PASSDA, the national Portuguese infrastructure in charge of conducting several cross-national comparative surveys, including the European Social Survey, the European Values Study, and the Comparative Study of Electoral Systems.