Introduction

IMPROVING LOCAL CONNECTIONS FOR THE EU PLATFORM FOR ACTION ON NUTRITION

Since the launch of the EU Platform for Action, members have launched 213 multi annual commitments representing hundreds of initiatives implemented at local, regional and national levels. In the same period, debates and new initiatives started in Member States and it appeared crucial to facilitate networking, synergies and partnership among stakeholders at all scales.

This Directory identifies national contact points of the EU Platform for Action who can be contacted for more information on initiatives in Member States and in view of supporting synergies between private and public actors in Member States. These contact points should be linked and be complementary to national platforms, or could serve as the core for the development of multi-stakeholder initiatives in countries where national structures do not exist yet.

GENERALISING THE IDEA PARTNERSHIP

The role of partnership has been discussed more generally at the 2005 European Health Forum in Gastein, in discussions under the joint auspices of the World Health Organisation and the Platform, in the Platform itself and in the 2006 WHO-Euro Istanbul Ministerial. The extent to which partnership approaches are being used in health or other public policy areas today varies from Member State to Member State. But the trend is to use partnership more extensively. Several platform members have said that they would like to have more and better partnerships in order to make their contribution to the platform objectives more effective.

Partnerships are clearly needed at EU level: one example is the current development of the parameters for a research project around social marketing for better nutritional/lifestyle behaviour.

Partnership can also be important at other levels: there are many examples where an actor has chosen to commit to a specific action, but has needed support from others, whether economic operators, civil society or local and national educational or other authorities, in order to make progress.

These perceived needs coincide with a growing evidence base on the effectiveness of local engagement as a technique. Fleurbaix-Laventie or Food Dudes are just 2 examples.

In addition, Member State governments are increasingly interested in closer participation in the work of the Platform. This seems to be true both of governments who have already developed national multi-stakeholder processes, and of others. While Presidencies and other proactive national governments have been welcomed from the start, the fact that Member States were not invited automatically to be full players has clearly inhibited some from getting engaged. This was not the intention. It is not difficult to generate closer involvement, now that the desire for it is rather widely shared.

There is also room for reflection on the more systematic role of corporate partners. The founding participants of the Platform for Action at EU level chose to construct the process around EU umbrella organisations. This has not prevented active contributions from some corporate players whose business vision incorporates the goal of contributing to the goal of “Healthy Life Years for EU Citizens”, which (not by coincidence) is one of the KPIs identified for the Lisbon process by the 2005 Spring European Council.

There is increasing evidence that sustained economic dynamism in Europe will go hand in hand with sustained population-wide health. This vision is achievable only if current anti-health trends, and notably the increase in obesity prevalence, are halted and reversed. Success in reversing such negative trends depends on sustained engagement by many partners in many areas: the food chain; leisure, sports and physical activity; education, media and thought leadership; health care ...

The EU Platform for Action, the High Level Committee on Health and more recently the “Nutrition, Physical Activity European network discussed modalities to ensure the highest synergy and complementarity between the different initiatives aimed at counteracting obesity.

The effectiveness of all platform initiatives would be significantly enhanced by the existence of networks, in all Member States, at national, and perhaps also at regional/city level, bringing together the same sorts of actors as are present in the EU Platform.

The functions of such networks should include the provision of:

- a first set of potential contacts for any platform member seeking to reach out to others with an interest in the nutrition/physical activity issue in order to do more or to work more effectively.
- a set of people who could act to ensure that best practice in one area of the EU is satisfactorily customised for application to specific circumstances in another part of the EU.
- support to those in government and outside who are seeking to raise the profile of these issues, since this is generally agreed to be a prerequisite for sustained effective action
- a network of persons and organisations to be part of monitoring and assessment of platform activities.

As a first step, each platform member has identified in each Member State, a person who would be willing to act as the first point of contact for other organisations within the country – whether or not directly linked to the platform - and which are seeking to build better networks around delivery of platform commitments, or even other activities related to platform activities. (Where no national contact points are identified, the name and contact data to the organisations contact person in the EU Platform is given.)

On the basis of this directory, it would be desirable to bring them together whether to act as the core of new national partnerships, or as a support network for existing national platforms. Such national processes would gain being achieved under clear public leadership and should have to be in line with the development of national policy and structures. Member State authorities in the lead on nutrition and physical activity issues, notably Ministries of Health, but also Ministries of Youth, of Education and of Sport, could therefore take the responsibility to convene these actors and play a role in devising the structures most adapted to the situation in the respective countries.
