Health

(in the framework of 2015, European Year of Development)

Health is a basic human right. When the international community set the Millennium Development Goals in 2000, many of them referred directly and indirectly to health. However, progress in this field – with particular regard to women’s and children’s health – has been slow in many countries. So things haven’t exactly turned out as planned. How can we learn from this and break the vicious circle in which poverty undermines health, while poor health compounds poverty?
