What about the new neighbours of the enlarged Union?

In order to avoid creating new dividing lines within our continent, the EU has further cooperation mechanisms to offer to its neighbours: a European Neighbourhood Policy (ENP) has been proposed, with the vision of sharing the EU’s fundamental values and objectives with a ring of countries, for example Belarus, Ukraine, Moldavia, Georgia and other nations in the Middle East and North Africa. The objective is to build a mutual commitment with these neighbouring countries to common values, principally within the fields of the rule of law, good governance, respect for human rights, promotion of good neighbourly relations, and the principles of market economy and sustainable development.

The new and the future member states

The fifth enlargement of the European has taken place on 1st May 2004, after the ratification of the accession treaty. After six years of thorough negotiations, the EU had agreed to admit 10 new members from central Europe and the Mediterranean who meet the political criteria – stable democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law. As full market economies, they will implement all the EU’s common rules and policies. Meanwhile, Bulgaria and Romania closed all their negotiation chapters, with a view to complete accession preparation in 2007. The same negotiation process will start with Croatia and Turkey in 2005.

If you want to know more about the enlargement of the EU or anything else on the EU, visit the Commission’s website: http://europa.eu.int/comm/enlargement/
Look for the nearest information point at: http://europa.eu.int/comm/networks/ei/eic.html or call Europe Direct from anywhere in the EU: 00 800 6 7 8 9 10 11.
What does enlargement mean for the ‘former’ Member States (EU15)?

Enlargement is a natural evolution, bringing an end to the division of our continent – a consequence of World War II – and having an impact on all facets of our continent. The extension of the zone of peace, stability and prosperity that the EU has brought to Europe will enhance the security of all its peoples. With a population of 450 million, the Union now represents the largest internal market in the world; this enlarged Single Market accounts for some 19% of world trade. The accession of 10 new countries is expected to lead to an increase of the EU25’s overall gross domestic product (GDP) by 4.5%, while at the same time reducing the average GDP per capita by 92% of the former EU15. However, this loss in GDP should quickly be compensated for by the implementation of the Single Market rules and improved market access for businesses, which are expected to lead to increased efficiencies through greater competition. Increased competition should also be positive for European consumers in terms of prices, variety and quality of goods and services, while also ensuring a consistent, higher degree of consumer protection. The overall conditions for business have been improved through a largely liberalized framework for investment and macroeconomic stability. A safer legal environment as well as solidarity with less developed regions will contribute to sustainable overall economic growth. The Union’s role in world affairs – in foreign policy, citizen protection, trade policy, and other fields of global governance – will be strengthened. The new Member States will enrich the EU with their wealth of different cultures, traditions, heritage and languages. So the Union is bigger and better for their joining us.

Is the impact of enlargement on daily life?

From now on, all EU citizens will be able to live, travel, work and study with greater ease throughout a territory that stretches from the Baltic Sea to the Eastern Mediterranean. For instance, individuals who have lived for 10 years in the same place will be less likely to face difficulties in obtaining EU residence permits. With the right of free movement of workers, people from across Europe will be able to take the benefit of improved employment policies by increasing labour skills, labour market flexibility, mobility of workers, business climate, adaptation to new technologies and equal opportunities. There will also be a better quality of life through common EU policies for the protection of the environment, and more security for all European citizens through joint efforts in the fight against crime, drugs and illegal immigration.

During the initial years of this enlarged Union, the Accession Treaty has foreseen transition periods so that ‘old’ and ‘new’ Member States can gradually become accustomed to the new economic and social dimensions of the EU. This will smooth the integration process in such matters as the free movement of workers, acquisition of land and secondary residences, VAT and excise matters, as well as in the area of environment.

What effect will enlargement have on the EU Institutions?

The 10 new Member States have been invited from the beginning in the work of the Convention to determine a Constitution for the European Union, updating the founding Treaties. Each country brings its own priorities and ideas and the Convention has taken these as well as the goals and needs of its members, old and new, on board. This Constitution will reinforce the European Institutions, simplify decision-making procedures, and incorporate fundamental citizenship’s rights. The enlarged EU now faces a new common challenge: the Governments and citizens of its Member States should approve this Constitution.

Are there limits to enlargement?

Past EU Treaties and Councils have stated that “Any European state may apply to become a member of the Union” and “Accession will take place as soon as an associated country is able to assume the obligations of membership by satisfying the economic and political conditions required”. At present, two candidate countries – Romania and Bulgaria – have closed accession negotiations with the objective of joining in 2007. Two other candidate countries – Croatia and Turkey – were admitted to opening negotiations in March and October 2005 respectively, provided some remaining conditions are fulfilled. The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia has expressed its wish to join the Union and the possibility of EU Membership has also been opened up to the other countries of South-East Europe.
What does enlargement mean for the ‘former’ Member States (EU15)?

Enlargement is a natural evolution, bringing an end to the division of our continent – a consequence of World War II – and having an impact on all facets of our continent. The extension of the zone of peace, stability and prosperity that the EU has brought to Europe will enhance the security of all its peoples. With a population of 453 million, the Union now represents the largest internal market in the world; this enlarged Single Market accounts for some 19% of world trade. The accession of 10 new countries is expected to lead to an increase of the EU25’s overall gross domestic product (GDP) by 0.5%, while at the same time reducing the average GDP per capita to 92% of the former EU15. However, this loss in GDP should quickly be compensated for by the implementation of the Single Market rules and improved market access for business, which are expected to lead to increased efficiencies through greater competition. Increased competition should also be positive for European consumers in terms of prices, variety and quality of supply of goods and services, while also ensuring a consistent, higher degree of consumer protection. The overall conditions for business have been improved through a largely liberalized framework for investment and macroeconomic stability. A safer legal environment as well as solidarity with less developed regions will contribute to sustainable overall economic growth. The Union’s role in world affairs – in foreign policy, citizen protection, trade policy, and other fields of global governance – will be strengthened. The new Member States will enrich the EU with their wealth of different cultures, traditions, heritage and languages. So the Union is bigger and better for their joining us.

What is the impact of enlargement on daily life?

From now on, all EU citizens will be able to live, travel, work and study with greater ease throughout a territory that stretches from the Baltic Sea to the Eastern Mediterranean. For instance, the Single Market ensures that citizens of the new Member States will be able to buy a car in one country and insure it in another, or rent a house in one country and pay the mortgage there. The impact on daily lives is considerable and wide ranging. It will mean greater security for all European citizens through joint efforts in the fight against crime, drugs and illegal immigration.

During the initial years of this enlarged Union, the Accession Treaty has foreseen transition periods so that ‘old’ and ‘new’ Member States can gradually become accustomed to the new economic and social dimensions of the EU. This will smooth the integration process in such matters as the free movement of workers, acquisition of land and secondary residences, VAT and excise matters, as well as in the area of environment.

Are there limits to enlargement?

Past EU Treaties and Councils have stated that “Any European state may apply to become a member of the Union” and “Accession will take place as soon as an associated country is able to assume the obligations of membership”. The enlarged EU now faces a new common challenge: the Governments and citizens of its Member States should approve this Constitution.

What effect will enlargement have on the EU Institutions?

The 10 new Member States have been involved from the beginning in the work of the Convention to determine a Constitution for the European Union, updating the founding Treaties. Each country brings its own priorities and ideas and the Convention has taken these as well as the goals and needs of its members, old and new, on board. This Constitution will reinforce the European Institutions, simplify decision-making procedures, and incorporate fundamental citizens’ rights. The enlarged EU now faces a new common challenge: the Governments and citizens of its Member States should approve this Constitution.

What does enlargement mean for the ‘former’ Member States (EU15)?

Enlargement is a natural evolution, bringing an end to the division of our continent – a consequence of World War II – and having an impact on all facets of our continent. The extension of the zone of peace, stability and prosperity that the EU has brought to Europe will enhance the security of all its peoples. With a population of 453 million, the Union now represents the largest internal market in the world: this enlarged Single Market accounts for some 19% of world trade. The accession of 10 new countries is expected to lead to an increase of the EU25’s overall gross domestic product (GDP) by 4.5%, while at the same time reducing the average GDP per capita to 92% of the former EU15. However, this loss in GDP should quickly be compensated for by the implementation of the Single Market rules and improved market access for businesses, which are expected to lead to increased efficiencies through greater competition. Increased competition should also be positive for European consumers in terms of prices, variety and quality of supply of goods and services, while also ensuring a consistent, higher degree of consumer protection. The overall conditions for business have been improved through a largely liberalized framework for investment and macroeconomic stability. A safer legal environment as well as solidarity with less developed regions will contribute to sustainable overall economic growth. The Union’s role in world affairs – in foreign policy, citizen protection, trade policy, and other fields of global governance – will be strengthened. The new Member States will enrich the EU with their wealth of different cultures, traditions, heritage and languages. So the Union is bigger and better for their joining us.

What is the impact of enlargement on daily life?

From now on, all EU citizens will be able to live, travel, work and study with greater ease throughout a territory that stretches from the Baltic Sea to the Eastern Mediterranean. For instance, ... more security for all European citizens through joint efforts in the fight against crime, drugs and illegal immigration.

During the initial years of this enlarged Union, the Accession Treaty has foreseen transition periods so that ‘old’ and ‘new’ Member States can gradually become accustomed to the new economic and social dimensions of the EU. This will smooth the integration process in such matters as the free movement of workers, acquisition of land and secondary residences, VAT and excise matters, as well as in the area of environment.

What effect will enlargement have on the EU Institutions?

The 10 new Member States have been invited from the beginning in the work of the Convention to determine a Constitution for the European Union, updating the founding Treaties. Each country brings its own priorities and ideas and the Convention has taken these as well as the goals and needs of its members, old and new, on board. This Constitution will reinforce the European Institutions, simplify decision-making procedures, and incorporate fundamental citizens’ rights. The enlarged EU now faces a new common challenge: the Governments and citizens of its Member States should approve this Constitution.

Are there limits to enlargement?

Past EU Treaties and Councils have stated that “Any European state may apply to become a member of the Union” and “Accession will take place as soon as an associated country is able to assume the obligations of membership by satisfying the economic and political conditions required”. At present, two candidate countries – Romania and Bulgaria – have closed accession negotiations with the objective of joining in 2007. Two other candidate countries – Croatia and Turkey – were admitted to opening negotiations in March and October 2005 respectively, provided some remaining conditions are fulfilled. The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia has expressed its wish to join the Union and the possibility of EU Membership has also been opened up to the other countries of South-East Europe.

EU STANDARDS APPLIED IN ALL 25 MEMBER STATES FOR A BETTER QUALITY OF LIFE.
The fifth enlargement of the European Union has taken place on 1st May 2004, after the ratification of the accession treaty. After six years of thorough negotiations, the EU had agreed to admit 10 new members from central Europe and the Mediterranean who meet the political criteria – stable democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law. As full market economies, they will implement all the EU’s common regulations and policies. Meanwhile, Bulgaria and Romania closed all their negotiation chapters, with a view to complete accession preparation in 2007. The same negotiation process will start with Croatia and Turkey in 2005.

What about the new neighbours of the enlarged Union?

In order to avoid creating new dividing lines within our continent, the EU has further cooperation mechanisms to offer to its neighbours: a European Neighbourhood Policy (ENP) has been proposed, with the vision of sharing the EU’s fundamental values and objectives with a ring of countries, for example Belarus, Ukraine, Moldova, Georgia and other nations in the Middle East and North Africa. The objective is to build a mutual commitment with these neighbouring countries to common values, principally within the fields of the rule of law, good governance, respect for human rights, promotion of good neighbourly relations, and the principles of market economy and sustainable development.

If you want to know more about the enlargement of the EU or anything else on the EU, visit the Commission’s website: http://europa.eu.int/comm/enlargement/
Look for the nearest information point at:
http://europa.eu.int/comm/relays/index_en.htm
or call Europe Direct from anywhere in the EU: 00 800 6 7 8 9 10 11
Whatabout the new neighbours of the enlarged Union?

In order to avoid creating new dividing lines within our continent, the EU has further cooperation mechanisms to offer to its neighbours: a European Neighbourhood Policy (ENP) has been proposed, with the vision of sharing the EU’s fundamental values and objectives with a ring of countries, for example Belarus, Ukraine, Moldova, Georgia and other nations in the Middle East and North Africa. The objective is to build a mutual commitment with these neighbouring countries to common values, principally within the fields of the rule of law, good governance, respect for human rights, including minority rights, promotion of good neighbourly relations, and the principles of market economy and sustainable development.

The

new and the future member states

The fifth enlargement of the European has taken place on 1st May 2004, after the ratification of the accession treaty. After six years of thorough negotiations, the EU had agreed to admit 10 new members from central Europe and the Mediterranean who meet the political criteria – stable democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law. As full market economies, they will implement all the EU’s common policies. With a view to complete accession preparation in 2007, the same negotiation process will start with Croatia and Turkey in 2005.

If you want to know more about the enlargement of the EU or anything else on the EU, visit the Commission’s website:
http://europa.eu.int/comm/enlargement/
Look for the nearest information point at:
http://europa.eu.int/comm/enterprise/networks/eurotic.html
http://europa.eu.int/comm/relays/index_en.htm
or call Europe Direct from anywhere in the EU: 00 800 6 7 8 9 10 11