Polis is an association of European cities and regions working together on transport and mobility issues.

Polis was founded in 1989 and currently represents over 60 municipalities and regions from the whole of Europe, including Central and Eastern European countries.

Our activities aim at increasing the awareness and expertise of local authorities in creating integrated and sustainable transport systems through the implementation of innovative technologies and policies.

Through regular conferences, workshops, newsletters and its web site, Polis provides a forum for cities and regions to discuss common urban transport issues, exchange experiences, gain information on EU policies and opportunities in view of establishing partnerships.

Polis also acts as a strong lobbying voice for European cities and regions by helping define priorities for transport actions and strategies at the European level and by investigating incentives for co-operation and funding mechanisms to promote the deployment of new solutions.

Polis members are active in European Union research and development programmes, testing innovative transport policies, systems and technologies at the local level.
