23CPR146-C	Compendium on What Works for Inclusive Growth in Cities	Since 2016, the OECD has been working with local leaders through the OECD Champion Mayors for Inclusive Growth Initiative to support the exchange of innovative solutions among city leaders and with national ministers. Over the years, Champion Mayors have been at the forefront of advancing place-based solutions for inclusive growth, promoting access to quality jobs, affordable housing, transport, and education to improve life chances for their citizens. However, despite political commitments, and an increasing number of initiatives to support inclusive growth, there remain important gaps in understanding of what works, the barriers to implementing policies, and how to assess their impact. To bridge this gap, the OECD jointly with DG REGIO will develop a joint study (a policy compendium) summarising “what works” in promoting inclusive growth in cities, drawing on experiences from a diverse sample of cities, including lessons learned from the work within the OECD’s Champion Mayors. 23CPR156-C	OECD Smart Enabling Regulations for the Green Transition at national and sub-national levels	The green transition is crucial for the planet and presents a major economic opportunity for countries, regions and businesses operating across Europe. Public investment in new green technologies is key, but, without an enabling regulatory environment that facilitates their market deployment at scale they will not transform into impactful innovations. Whilst much can and is being done at the European Union level (eg. Proposal for the Net Zero Industry Act), much will need to be done at national and sub-national level to make markets work better to foster the green transition. National and sub-national governments therefore need all the support they can get to ensure their regulatory infrastructure is fit to facilitate a fast green transition. This can be achieved, amongst others, by collecting, analysing and recommending practices to allow regions to attract investment for green.
