Title
DG JUST - Impact assessment accompanying the Proposal for an amendment of the Brussels IIa Regulation (No 2201/2003) (draft version of 11 November 2015)*

(A) Context
The Brussels IIa Regulation, in force since 2005, contains rules on jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement in matrimonial matters (relating to divorce, legal separation and marriage annulment) and matters of parental responsibility (with rules on custody, access and child protection measures).

The wide variety in family law regulations across Member States, notably in the areas of matrimonial and parental responsibility matters, generates legal uncertainty, delays or difficulties in legal proceedings and the enforcement of court decisions for international couples and their children.

The Brussels IIa Regulation is a REFIT initiative in the 2016 Commission Work Programme.

(B) Overall opinion: NEGATIVE
The Board gives a negative opinion since the report is deficient in the following key aspects, which should be improved.

1) Being a REFIT initiative, the report should be based on and start with a fully developed section on the key findings of the evaluation study and the related REFIT conclusions. On this basis, it should outline and clarify the simplification and cost-reduction of the preferred options and provide quantitative estimates (or if not possible, explain why).

2) The report should present a more substantiated assessment of the problems, their drivers, their likely evolution as well as the extent to which the proposed measures will address them.

3) The baseline scenario should incorporate those developments likely to occur under the assumption of a "no-policy-change" and the description of options should better explain the coherence of the proposed measures with these developments (e.g. with Rome III).

4) The report should better highlight what are the more substantial changes proposed, how they will affect different Member States and why they are considered justified/proportionate.

(C) Main recommendations for improvements

* Note that this opinion concerns a draft impact assessment report which may differ from the one adopted
1) The findings from the REFIT exercise should be presented at the beginning of the report. Such a section should include a presentation of the results of the evaluation study and highlight the Commission services’ conclusions from the REFIT exercise. It should clarify how the areas for simplification were identified and how the proposed solutions will simplify and/or modernise the existing instrument to reflect today’s context (e.g. explaining whether the proposal also covers registered partnerships). Finally, the anticipated burden reduction should be quantified. If this is not possible, it should be clearly explained why not.

2) The report should better present the evidence base that led to the proposed amendments. After clarifying the overall EU (e.g. Rome III Regulation, Brussels I Regulation) and international family law context (e.g. the Hague Convention), key findings from the evaluation of the existing Brussels IIa Regulation should be presented. In view of the limited amount of available hard evidence, the report should better trace back problems with the source from which they were identified (case law, evaluation, stakeholder consultations,…).

3) The baseline scenario, as a dynamic and not static concept, should incorporate likely developments and evolutions in the context of EU family law. The description of options should also take into account this diverse and dynamic context. When presenting the options, the report should explain how the proposed modifications are articulated coherently with other existing instruments and practices already in place in some Member States (e.g. how would the proposed measures to prevent a "rush to court" coexist with the provisions of the Rome III regulation in force in 16 Member States). The argumentation for specific options should also be strengthened by including an explanation of the effectiveness of some of the proposed measures that are already in place in some Member States (e.g. use of specialist courts) and how they could benefit other Member States.

4) The report should better distinguish between minor adjustments and substantial changes proposed. It should summarise the concrete implications of such changes for different Member States. The need for the more intrusive measures should be further substantiated, together with an analysis of their proportionality and Member States’ willingness to accept such changes. In this respect, the report should also clarify the possibility and implications of having potentially different regimes in some Member States when dealing with domestic or cross-border cases (e.g. in parental responsibility matters, as regards hearing of the child).

Some more technical comments have been transmitted directly to the author DG and are expected to be incorporated in the final version of the impact assessment report.

(D) Procedure and presentation
The report could be further shortened, with a view to make it more accessible. In addition, the language could be rendered less technical / legalistic in order to better bring out the underlying objectives of the initiative and the evidence base. Given the currently limited provision of quantified evidence, the basis and rationale for the proposed amendments should be summarised for each option.
