

INFORMAL COMMISSION EXPERT GROUP ON MISSION CRITICAL COMMUNICATION

TERMS OF REFERENCE

1. BACKGROUND

Complex security challenges in Europe require us to enhance the capacity of public authorities responsible for security and safety to perform their functions. Secure communication is a key pre-condition to ensure this capacity. The Council has in that regard underlined ‘the importance of secure operational and EU interoperable communication for law enforcement agencies and other security practitioners (...)’, and invited ‘Member States to further support EU initiatives aiming at the improvement of existing systems and EU-wide interoperable communication systems for public security, notably the Horizon 2020 BroadWay project’<sup>1</sup>.

The Commission works since 2016 with Member States on elements of an EU-wide critical communication system (EU critical communication system, hereafter ‘EUCCS’). It will link Member States’ communication systems for public security and safety<sup>2</sup> and supplement them with an EU-level component, allowing for their full interoperability. The EUCCS would considerably improve the coordination and timely response of law enforcement and emergency services in carrying out their tasks, for instance when different authorities cooperate across borders in carrying out a hot pursuit or a controlled drug delivery in the Schengen area or when jointly responding to a terrorist attack or a natural disaster. The current systems do not allow for state-of-the-art communication and data exchange and are not capable of ensuring seamless cross-border cooperation. The EU security research projects BroadMap (2016 – 2017) and BroadWay (2018 – 2022)<sup>3</sup> developed technical solutions for EUCCS, and validated them in operational tests carried out in different EU Member States in 2022. In 2023, several Member States and Norway are moving ahead as pioneers in the ISF-funded project BroadEUNet Preparation.

A Commission expert group is needed to bring together Commission services with experts of all Member States and Schengen-associated countries<sup>4</sup> at legal, operational and technical level, to prepare governance and system components, with a view to establishing the Union-wide system by 2030. The group will also follow-up on the commitment to ‘...explore the extent to which IRIS<sup>2</sup> [the EU secure connectivity satellite constellation] can support the
