9. RELATIONS WITH NON-EU COUNTRIES

SITUATION IN HAITI FOLLOWING THE EARTHQUAKE ON 12 JANUARY 2010

(SEC(2010)54)

The PRESIDENT spoke about the terrible tragedy caused by the earthquake in Haiti on 12 January and the massive international effort to bring aid to the victims. He noted that the Commission was taking part in this effort, in particular through humanitarian aid under the responsibility of Mr DE GUCHT, and the Monitoring and Information Centre (MIC) under the responsibility of Mr DIMAS, coordinated by Baroness ASHTON, who had chaired an extraordinary Foreign Affairs Council meeting on this subject on Monday 18 January. He asked Baroness ASHTON and Mr DE GUCHT to report on the current situation on the ground and the aid efforts by the European Union.

Pointing out that this was the worst natural disaster in Haiti's history, Baroness ASHTON said that this was also the first time since the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty that the EU had been called upon to mobilise a comprehensive response to this type of crisis. She praised the Commission and Council officials for their efforts, saying that her coordinating role meant that she was in regular contact with the various organisations concerned, in particular the United States Secretary of State, the UN, the Spanish Council Presidency, the Foreign Ministers of the EU Member States most concerned, in particular France, and the "Friends of Haiti" in the Organisation of American States. She also explained her decision, based on a UN request, not to go to Haiti in the first few days following the earthquake.

She reported on the outcome of the extraordinary meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 January, focusing on the amounts of aid granted or planned and the role of the Commission and Member States, the coordination mechanism and the request for a rapid deployment of police and gendarmerie forces to underpin the current operations.

She also provided some details concerning the latest information available on casualties (estimated at this stage at 75,000 people but which could rise to 200,000), the injured and those left homeless, and concerning the loss of life among employees of international organisations, in particular non-government organisations, the UN and the Commission Delegation, which had lost one staff member. The port infrastructure and official buildings had also been destroyed, and more generally there were security risks and challenges in terms of the needs of an already vulnerable people.

Baroness ASHTON pointed out that 21 Member States had already responded to the appeal for assistance to deal with these effects of the disaster by making available emergency teams. A team of experts and one liaison officer were already in Haiti to deal with priorities in the coming days and weeks. She herself would go to Washington the following day to determine, in consultation with US Secretary of State Hilary Clinton and UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon, the timetable for future operations, and to prepare an international donor conference and assess long-term needs.

Mr DE GUCHT referred to the information note on the extraordinary Foreign Affairs Council of 18 January which described the aftermath of the earthquake in Haiti, highlighting the good cooperation with the Council in organising this first crisis management operation under the Lisbon Treaty. The situation on the ground was improving steadily despite the extent of the damage and security challenges.
Relief had been organised at international level, involving the UN, and a Security Council Resolution might well be adopted.

Distinguishing between immediate humanitarian aid, provided by means of automatic procedures and very competent teams, and the long-term challenge of restoring the State, given the physical destruction of the administrative infrastructure and the death of a large number of senior officials, Mr DE GUCHT said that a team of experts would be sent to Haiti to assess short and long-term needs regarding the rehabilitation and reconstruction of government institutions. He ended by saying that he himself was going to Haiti the following day, where he would also be in contact with the Dominican Republic authorities.
The Commission then turned to the European Union's role in responding to the humanitarian crisis, in particular the fact that the European GMES satellite communication system had been made available to all the international teams, which had been particularly useful since most communications had been cut. It also underlined the importance of establishing an international contingency plan to ensure an immediate response to any future disasters.

The PRESIDENT thanked the Commission members and the departments and Cabinets concerned for mobilising to deal with the first humanitarian crisis which the EU had had to respond to since the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty, pointing out that it was essential to be consistent and effective and to highlight the work of the EU. He welcomed the efforts made by Baroness ASHTON, Mr DE GUCHT and Mr DIMAS and their departments to ensure coherence, efficiency and visibility, in terms of citizens, of the action taken by the EU, in addition to that of the Member States.

While the top priority was to respond to the humanitarian crisis, it was important to start preparing for the future as of now. The crisis had demonstrated the need for proper cooperation and coordination of efforts. The PRESIDENT had in fact commissioned a report on civil protection back in 2006 from the then former Commission Member, Mr Michel Barnier, and when assigning responsibilities to the incoming Commission had created a portfolio for "International cooperation, humanitarian aid and crisis response" in close cooperation with the Vice-President and High Representative of the EU for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy. He hoped that Mr DE GUCHT's visit to Haiti would help ensure efficient European action and would highlight the collective efforts made by the EU and its Member States.

The PRESIDENT concluded by paying tribute, on behalf of the Commission, to Ms Pilar JUÁREZ BOAL, a European Commission official and head of operations at the Port-au-Prince Delegation who had been representing the Commission at a UN meeting at the time of the earthquake and who was still reported missing.

The Commission took note of this information and of the note from Baroness ASHTON and Mr DE GUCHT, in association with Mr DIMAS, set out in SEC(2010)54.

10. OTHER BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT informed the members that Ms Rumania Jeleva had that day withdrawn her candidacy for the post of European Commissioner and had also resigned from her current post as Bulgarian Foreign Minister. Following discussions with the Bulgarian authorities, Ms Kristalina Georgieva had been proposed to replace her, as a designated member of the future Commission.

He explained that the process of appointing the new Commission was continuing but would be delayed by this development, although he himself planned to meet Ms Georgieva this week and approval of her appointment was expected to be fast-tracked. He reminded the meeting that, after his agreement, Ms Georgieva would first have to complete a written questionnaire, then attend a hearing before the European Parliament, which would have to vote in favour of her appointment before the revised list of Commissioners-designate could be endorsed by the Council. Discussions were under way with the European Parliament and the Council, but had not yet concluded. It was possible that the vote on the composition of the new Commission as a whole would be on 9 February, which would mean that it would take up office on 10 February.

The PRESIDENT understood the difficulties that this delay would cause for the outgoing members, since they would have to defer starting their new activities, and promised to keep them informed of developments.

The question was raised whether, given the extension of the period of management of current business, the Commission could hold a discussion to prepare the informal European Council meeting on 11 February on the replacement of the Lisbon strategy. In reply the PRESIDENT referred to the principle of institutional continuity and the meetings still to be held by the present Commission, but said that it was for the next Commission to take the formal decisions concerning the “EU 2020” strategy.

He emphasised that this was an exceptional situation, referring in particular to the significant delay between the start of the term of the new European Parliament in July 2009 and the formation of the new Commission.

He expected the European Parliament to support the new composition that included Ms Georgieva, so as to enable the new Commission to start work as soon as possible and the outgoing members to take up their new commitments.

The Commission took note of this information.
