The principles of the ERSCharter

- We acknowledge the importance of developing a positive road safety culture in the European Union as we aim to halve road casualties and progress towards our 'vision zero' for road safety.
- We recognise the importance of taking part in a European initiative that gathers participants from all Member States and includes organisations of all types* and sizes, with or without previous experience in road safety.
- We believe that our organisation needs to take or support action for road safety, in our field of expertise.
- We voluntarily choose the action that best suits our needs, capacities and skills.
- We support the exchange of information and experience between ERSCharter members in order to facilitate a better understanding of road safety.
- We believe in communicating openly, honestly and accurately with one another.
- We honour the rights, beliefs and cultures of every member and individual and will treat one another with the highest degree of respect and dignity.
- We will enjoy the same rights as all other members to access and disseminate information, participate in the ERSCharter activities and use the ERSCharter visual identity.
- We understand that the ERSCharter must adhere to strict ethical rules in order to avoid any abuse of membership privileges.
